Mr. President, let me repeat in part what I said a few moments ago and offer an observation or two. At the present time a citizen has a right to the use of these utilities. They can not be denied to him by the proprietors, and why? Because they are public utilities and they are held in trust by the proprietors in part for the public use. Hence every citizen under the common law has the right to demand the service of these utilities and to demand it without discrimination and with a reasonable degree of care and promptness. But when the Government of the United States lays its sovereign hand upon these utilities it absorbs into itself all the rights the public bore to the State, all the rights of the individual citizens of the United States, because the Government stands for and represents all of them in contemplation of law. If then the Government should to-morrow take over these utilities and there is no clause written into the law which will perpetuate the legal right of the citizen to this service, any citizen can be refused that service and he is totally and absolutely without redress, first, because the public use has been absorbed in the sovereignty itself and, second, because he can not sue that sovereignty. Nobody can sue the United States of America except where Congress has expressly granted that permission.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to ask the Senator the construction of the last clause in the joint resolution.

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transmission of Government communications, or the issue of stocks and bonds by such system or systems.

The exception, of course, is not relevant to the amendment the Senator from Missouri proposes.

Now, the question I wish to ask is, Are not the rights of the citizens of which the Senator speaks protected by the provision that this measure shall not be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws referring to taxation or the local police regulations of the several States? Is it not a fact that the right of the general public to be served by public utilities, such as common carriers, hotels, telegraph companies, and telephone companies, comes under the police regulation? Are not all the laws, both common and statutory, governing these public utilities police regulations, and must not the public utility render this service, and is not that preserved in the bill?

Mr. REED. If the right of a citizen to send a telegram is a police regulation it is news to me. The right of a citizen to send a telegram rests upon the common-law principle that these concerns are quasi public in their character, and that having undertaken to serve a public duty of that kind a citizen has a right to employ them.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, is it not a fact that the right is born of the duty imposed upon the public utility company, because the citizen has no property and no interest of any kind in the property or the service of the company except as the police regulation requires the company to do certain things?

Mr. REED. It does not rest on that. Police regulations are for the protection of public morals and of public peace. The other rights are in their nature such as a suit could be brought to enforce.

Police regulations—

I read from Black's Law Dictionary—

Laws of a State, or ordinances of a municipality, which have for their object the preservation and protection of public peace and good order, and of the health, morals, and security of the people.

So, Mr. President, for once the distinguished lawyer and Senator, I think, is in error. The purpose of those who drafted this resolution and wrote the exception to the law was not to preserve any such rights as I am discussing.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just one moment, until I finish this sentence. The exception in the bill was intended, first, to preserve those laws which affect taxation, and then it says "or the lawful police regulations of the several States." Neither of them has anything to do with interstate messages. The police regulations of the States, I think, that are referred to here are those rules and regulations which are adopted for the preservation of the public peace of the community. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri is eminently correct in his interpretation of this clause, and the history of the clause might shed additional light upon the subject. This proviso is imported from the railroad act. It was inserted in that act, of course, to protect the rights of the State over taxation and to protect the police powers growing out of the right of certain States to make regulations with respect to separate cars that ought to be preserved inviolate.

Mr. REED. The Senator means separate cars for white and colored.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; that is the origin of that part of the proviso. Of course it has no relation here, but was simply bodily transported into this act.

Mr. SHIELDS. The courts, both Federal and State, have held that the laws for the separation of the races on cars and in public places to be police regulations.

Mr. GORE. Certainly; that was my suggestion and it was to preserve that.

Mr. SHIELDS. At common law the regulation of charges upon vehicles, charges at hotels, and many other things were police regulations, and the duty of the common carrier to serve all was held to be a police regulation. Our statutes upon the subject are only supplementary of the common law, applied to the new public utilities that have arisen in latter days.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator has expressed his view and I have expressed mine. I am not going to be conceited enough to affirm that I am right, but I undoubtedly think I am right. If the right of the citizens to use the telephone is a police regulation and comes under the police regulation it is news to me, but I have frequently found that I run across something I never heard of before and that I have been in ignorance of. But let us assume that the Senator from Tennessee is right, I do nothing in this amendment but reaffirm and reassert a right and make it clear.

When these utilities are taken over the administration of their business affairs will be turned over to a vast multitude of men. It almost always happens that some men put into public position become more or less arbitrary, and if they are under no restraints whatever great damage and injury may be done. I think you make a mistake when you pass this bill and pass it in such a form as to make it as obnoxious as possible. I think it will do no harm to say to the people of the United States your right to use these instrumentalities is fully preserved. I am sure under ordinary conditions and circumstances an amendment of this kind would be accepted. It is not put in here for any purpose in the world except to cover what I believe will be a defect in the law governing these utilities after they are taken over. It preserves a right that all of you expect and wish and hope will be preserved.

Now, Mr. President, I do not care to argue it further for I do not want to take the time of the Senate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I would like to say one word in regard to the amendment. It seems to me a pity to enact this legislation after this proposition has been made and reject it. It is only written into the resolution that which is approved as a matter of course. It is not a right in my judgment that rests in the police power. It is a right that grows out of the nature of the service that these corporations offer to render to the general public, and we are only writing into the resolution a proposition that in our opinion no operations of these lines, if they are taken over by the Government, will interfere with that natural right. The amendment contemplates and specifically provides that in any situation where the private right and the Government right conflict the private right must give way. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I ask for a roll call.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the other roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the other roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the last vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have already announced the transfer of my pair, and I will let that announcement stand for the rest of the day. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I again announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH] and the fact that he is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the negative). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the former vote, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota and withdrew my vote, not being able to get a transfer. I wish to state that if I were at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Borah	Harding	McCumber	Sherman
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Mich.
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sterling
Fernald	Kenyon	Penrose	Thomas
France	King	Pittman	Wadsworth
Gore	Knox	Pomerene	Watson
Hale	Lenroot	Reed

NAYS—32.

Ashurst	Kendrick	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Lewis	Phelan	Smith, Ga.
Benet	McKellar	Poindexter	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Martin	Ransdell	Swanson
Fletcher	Myers	Saulsbury	Thompson
Henderson	Nelson	Shafroth	Trammell
Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sheppard	Underwood
Jones, Wash.	Overman	Shields	Vardaman

NOT VOTING—37.

Baird	Gerry	La Follette	Townsend
Beckham	Goff	Lodge	Walsh
Calder	Gronna	McLean	Warren
Chamberlain	Guion	McNary	Weeks

Cummins	Hollis	Robinson	Williams
Dillingham	James	Simmons	Wolcott
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Md.
Frelinghuysen	Kellogg	Smoot
Gallinger	Kirby	Sutherland

So Mr. REED'S amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. WATSON. I offer on page 1, line 7, an amendment to strike out the word "telephone," which I offered as in Committee of the Whole, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as I did on the last roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If he were present he would vote "nay," and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the negative). I desire to announce the same pair and transfer as I did on the last vote, and I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Borah	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Hale	McCumber	Smoot
Curtis	Harding	New	Sterling
Fernald	Kellogg	Penrose	Wadsworth
France	Knox	Sherman	Watson

NAYS—41.

Ashurst	Kenyon	Phelan	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	King	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Benet	Lewis	Poindexter	Swanson
Colt	McKellar	Pomerene	Thomas
Fletcher	Martin	Ransdell	Thompson
Henderson	Myers	Saulsbury	Trammell
Hitchcock	Nelson	Shafroth	Underwood
Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sheppard	Vardaman
Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Shields
Jones, Wash.	Overman	Simmons
Kendrick	Owen	Smith, Ariz.

NOT VOTING—35.

Baird	Gerry	Kirby	Sutherland
Beckham	Goff	La Follette	Townsend
Calder	Gore	Lodge	Walsh
Chamberlain	Gronna	McLean	Warren
Culberson	Guion	McNary	Weeks
Cummins	Hardwick	Page	Wilfley
Dillingham	Hollis	Reed	Williams
Fall	James	Robinson	Wolcott
Gallinger	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Md.

So Mr. WATSON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I desire to call attention to Senate Document 399, Sixty-third Congress, second session, relative to Government ownership of electrical means of communication, dated November 23, 1913, the same being a report made by a special committee consisting of Daniel C. Roper, M. O. Chance, and J. C. Koons. That document shows that 69 nations of the world own and control the telegraph lines, and that the United States is the only great Nation which does not. That document is comprised in a book of 148 pages, showing most overwhelming evidence justifying the adoption of the control of the telegraph by the nations of the world, and I did not want to have the RECORD overlook that fact.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely wish now to say that the subject matter of this amendment respecting the wire companies and the protection of the newspapers and the press will all be taken care of by proper regulations when these companies pass into the hands of the Government. There need be no fear but that they will be taken care of after consultation with the owners and those who are interested.

Mr. PENROSE. Similar to the railroad regulations, I suppose.

Mr. LEWIS. Very similar, because such has been done, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. Increased rates, miserable accommodations for the traveling public, and general scandal and discontent all over the country.

Mr. LEWIS. The accommodation has not been as generous as we should like, but that is because the demands of the war have monopolized opportunity.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can not restrain from expressing the satisfaction I have at the official notice as to just how the business is to be managed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered in the Senate, the question is, Shall the joint resolution be read a third time?

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WATSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. BECKHAM's name was called). I am instructed to say that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is necessarily absent on official business, and that, if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on previous roll calls, and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll calls, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was called). I announce the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who has necessarily been called away, I am informed that if he were present he would vote for the joint resolution.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as heretofore, and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I made on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I desire to be recorded in the negative and to say that my colleague [Mr. CALDER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on important business. Were he present, he would vote in the negative.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore, I vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. WOLCOTT's name was called). I desire to announce that if my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] were present he would vote in favor of the joint resolution.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is detained on official business, and that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is absent on account of a death in his family. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

I have been requested also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. If present my colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Ashurst	Kenyon	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	King	Phelan	Smith, Ga.
Benet	Knox	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Lenroot	Poindexter	Sterling

So the joint resolution was passed.

ADJOURNMENTS OVER—UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent order, which I ask may be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that beginning with Monday, July 15, 1918, and until Saturday, August 24, 1918, the Senate will meet each Monday and Thursday, and on Thursday, August 22, 1918, the Senate will adjourn until Saturday, August 24, 1918, and at the close of the routine morning business of each Monday and Thursday the Senate will adjourn, and that during the period from July 15 to August 24, 1918, no business other than routine morning business will be transacted, and that no bills or resolutions shall be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous consent asked for?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I do not desire to interpose an objection to the particular resolution, because I do not wish, of course, to interfere with what my colleagues may desire, but of record I want to enter my protest against what is practically an adjournment at this time, and I want to enter my protest against an adjournment by which we come back here in a strait-jacket with a particular measure which shall occupy our time continuously, notwithstanding what emergency may confront us, until the particular measure shall have been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not understand that the effect of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement will make it impossible for the Senate to meet prior to the time stated. I think it would have been better had an express provision been inserted that, subject to the call of the Democratic leader and the Republican leader, on three days' notice the unanimous-consent agreement would be suspended; but if a necessity should arise for a session of the Senate, unquestionably, on notice to Senators, they would return and this unanimous-consent agreement be set aside.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I insist that unanimous-consent agreements can not be set aside. I am not going to object, although I am a good deal in the humor of doing so; but I call attention to the fact that under this proposed unanimous-consent agreement, no matter what the emergency may be, the Senate can not transact any business until the 26th day of August, unless it breaks the unanimous-consent agreement and its rules.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator from Missouri say that the Senate can not transact any business until the 26th of August?

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly, under this proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate has passed one of the most important bills that it had before it—a bill providing for metalliferous mining on Indian reservations. That bill will pass the House within a few days with a slight amendment. Am I to be told that the Senate can not act on that measure until the 26th of August?

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly it can not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, that is exactly what this proposed agreement means—that the Senate can not act until the 26th of August—and it not only means that——

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have the proposed unanimous-consent agreement altered to that extent, and that the sole exception be made that the amendments of the House to the bill providing for the metalliferous mining on Indian reservations may be agreed to or disagreed to and that conferees may be appointed thereon.

Mr. NORRIS. Why limit it to that exception, Mr. President?

Mr. ASHURST. Because that is a very important bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that to the Senator; but there may be many other things just as important as that. It does not seem to me that there is any necessity of binding up the Senate like this, even if the program is carried out.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the vice of the situation is beyond that which has been suggested by the Senator from Arizona, too. One particular measure—that relating to prohibition—is to occupy us exclusively upon our return until it shall have been disposed of. Now, it may be disposed of in one day.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one minute?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is expressly stated, "except by unanimous consent."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, yes; "except by unanimous consent"; but what unanimous consent will you possibly obtain, once you enter upon that measure? So you may take it that when we return here on the 26th day of August one measure—prohibition—will occupy us until it shall have been concluded. It may be concluded in one day; it is much more likely that it will be concluded in one month. So for a month from the 26th of August the Senate puts itself in such a situation that it can not do anything except debate prohibition, no matter what may happen upon the western front, and no matter what may happen in this great crisis and this great emergency.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if he does not think prohibition is more important just now than anything that may happen on the western front?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am unable to subscribe to that view. I am ready to sit here and vote upon prohibition on next Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, or any day when it may be reached; but I call your attention, Senators, to the particular attitude into which we are getting ourselves at this time, and it is an attitude to which I will not subscribe. While I will not, because I am alone in that particular view, object to the unanimous-consent agreement, still I want to voice my protest against any such attitude and against any such situation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that he is not alone in that view. I concur heartily in every word that he has uttered upon the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am delighted to hear it; and it seems to me there ought to be a ready assent from the whole Senate to a view of that sort.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize that we have a morning hour each morning, and that we will not have to take up the bill until 2 o'clock, and that we can temporarily lay aside the bill at any time, and will do so if there is any emergency requiring it?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But we can not transact any business. That is the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. We can talk. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We can talk, and perhaps that is sufficient from the standpoint——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must announce that he intends to preserve order in the Chamber. The rule requires that the galleries shall be cleared if there is disorder, and the Chair will enforce the rule.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator said that when we got back here we could discuss nothing else than prohibition; but when we get back on the 26th day of August, or the 24th day of August, we will have the morning hour each morning, and, in addition to that, the bill can be temporarily laid aside if there is anything that is more important for consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, by unanimous consent, of course, we can do anything; but the Senator realizes that in the heat of the argument of a question such as will confront us then there will be no unanimous consent.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator from California made the statement that he alone was willing to go on with the business before us. I voted against the recess. I am willing to go on, but when I know that the great majority—I think all, with the exception of three, as already stated—after this seven months' session desire to go home for a few days, I am not going to interpose any objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment to the unanimous-consent agreement, so that there can be no further objection to it, in my opinion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator to the fact that this is a request for unanimous consent and is not subject to amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no doubt that Senators can discuss it and agree upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate allow me at least to propose this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not necessary. It is not in the form of a motion, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SMOOT. After the proposed unanimous-consent agreement as stated from the desk I suggest adding the following:

Provided, That in case an emergency arises, Senator MARTIN shall notify Senators thereof, and they shall reconvene on the day mentioned by him, and thereafter the Senate will proceed to the consideration of business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I was just drawing a similar provision, including also the leader on the other side of the Chamber. I understand the difficulty about it, because he is sick, but I was unwilling myself to offer it without including both leaders. For my part, I think we ought to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I have said that I will not object to the original unanimous-consent agreement. I do object, notwithstanding the high esteem and the great regard I have for the Senator mentioned in this particular case, to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I withdraw the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the original proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest the same language, substituting the name of the Vice President. Would that be acceptable to the Senator?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will say that I shall not object to the original unanimous-consent agreement that is asked. I wish to preserve my view upon that matter; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment, please, Mr. President, before the request is put.

Mr. NORRIS. If I am recognized, I should like to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say something in reference to this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the Chair was about to put the unanimous-consent agreement to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the reason why I took the floor, or one of the reasons.

While in my judgment the original unanimous-consent proposition is entirely unnecessary, and one that ought not to be offered at all—it seems to me we could save it all by simply doing nothing about it, since there is an understanding that without an emergency no business will be transacted until that time, and there is not any doubt that it will be carried out—the original suggestion there prohibits the Senate, when it meets and transacts morning business, from even passing a Senate resolution by unanimous consent or anything of the kind. It can not be done. If the Senate is to meet at all, it ought to have the right by unanimous consent to adopt some motion besides a motion to adjourn, and yet that would be out of order under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement. Now, I do not like to object to it, but it does seem to me that the Senate ought not to tie itself up as tight as that. That is, in effect, an adjournment contrary to the Constitution of the United States, because only one motion will be in order, and that is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this unanimous-consent agreement is in the exact words in which we have had other unanimous-consent agreements for this purpose. I will suggest to the Senator that there will be very few Senators here, perhaps not to exceed half a dozen, and it is hardly fair to say that they could agree here to pass Senate resolutions.

Mr. NORRIS. At least it could be said in their behalf that they are here, and those who are away ought not to object to their transacting any business that may legitimately come before them, especially if they can do it by unanimous consent. It would always be in the power of any Senator so inclined to defeat it by making the point of no quorum. That would always be in order; but there are a good many things that it might be desirable to do. I do not like to object to the agreement, however, if almost everybody is satisfied with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to suggest the following amendment, and submit it to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the very earnest hope that he will accept it. I do think we ought to have some way by which we can ourselves bring the Senate into session, if it is necessary, before the close of this period, and I ask the especial attention of the Senator from California:

Provided, however, That whenever, before the 22d day of August, 1918, a quorum of the Senate is found to be present the Senate may, by unanimous consent, vacate this agreement, such action to take effect three days thereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, to my mind that is far better than the original agreement; and I want to make plain to you that, while I am protesting against this adjournment, because I think it is our duty to remain here on the job, nevertheless, because of the overwhelming sentiment here, I do not propose to enter an objection to the original proposed unanimous-consent agreement or to this, which is presented by the Senator from Georgia. I think it adds something, at least, to the original proposal.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah if he will not accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. It is perfectly satisfactory to me, and it seems to me that it covers every objection that possibly could be raised.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask, Mr. President, to have the Secretary read it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the suggested addition to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, the following words:

Provided, however, That whenever, before the 22d day of August, 1918, a quorum of the Senate is found to be present, the Senate may, by unanimous consent, vacate this agreement, such action to take effect three days thereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to ask another question of the Senator from Georgia. His amendment says "when a quorum is present." I do not know that it is very serious; but if there is already a quorum present, why provide that three days must elapse before the Senate can proceed to transact business?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In order that the absent Senators, who are not aware of the fact that we are about to proceed with business, may have an opportunity to get here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement as amended?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I shall not object, but I desire to state that my views coincide with those expressed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The agreement as finally adopted is as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that, beginning with Monday, July 15, 1918, and until Saturday, August 24, 1918, the Senate will meet each Monday and Thursday, and on Thursday, August 22, 1918, the Senate will adjourn until Saturday, August 24, 1918, and at the close of the routine morning business of each Monday and Thursday the Senate will adjourn, and that during the period from July 15 to August 24, 1918, no business other than routine morning business will be transacted and that no bills or resolutions shall be passed: Provided, however, That whenever, before the 22d day of August, 1918, a quorum of the Senate is found to be present, the Senate may, by unanimous consent, vacate this agreement, such action to take effect three days thereafter.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR NEWLANDS.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, after consultation with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I desire to give notice that on Monday, the 26th day of August, following the routine morning business, I shall ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the Senate may have an opportunity to pay respect to the memory of the late Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

MOVEMENTS OF SOLDIERS' MAIL (S. DOC. NO. 266.)

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the Postmaster General has made reply to a Senate resolution relative to the movements of the mails to and from our troops and auxiliaries abroad. It is always customary to print the replies to resolutions of the Senate directed to any one of the officers of the Cabinet; but this response was referred to the Committee on Printing without a request for its printing, to which no one would have objected. I therefore ask that the reply be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair, thinking it likely that he may not be able to be present on each occasion when the Senate meets under the agreement as to recesses and nontransaction of business, asks unanimous consent of the Senate to designate JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to occupy the chair should he be so absent prior to the 24th day of August next. Is there objection to that request and to such designation as stated? The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., Saturday, July 13, 1918) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 13, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the ages, our fathers' God and our God, author of liberty, we bow at its sacred shrine and would pour out our oblations in praise and gratitude to Thee for all the blessings vouchsafed to us as freemen; and we pray that Thy blessing may follow us and our allies in this last struggle, we trust, for the sacred rights of men.

We thank Thee that all kindred nations associated with us in the mighty struggle for liberty joined in the celebration of our natal day, and we bless Thee for the preparations now being made throughout our land to join with suffering France in the celebration of her natal day, the fall of the Bastille.

"The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

May it hearten them and us and all lovers of liberty to press forward to a victory for peace, through Him who taught us the way, and the truth, and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had, on July 12, 1918, approved and signed joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 313. Joint resolution providing for the disposition of moneys represented in the Alfred Bernard Nobel peace prize, awarded in 1906; and

H. R. 10021. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 12229. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 12100. An act to amend the act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States, and for other purposes."

NATIONAL HOLIDAY OF FRANCE.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution (H. Res. 419) extending greetings to the Republic of France upon the anniversary of its national holiday, and urging the people of the United States to observe July 14, Bastille Day, as a mark of regard for the people of France.

Whereas the people and the Government of the Republic of France have expressed their friendship for the United States by celebrating the Fourth of July; and

Whereas the 14th of July, the national holiday of France, is similar in its significance to our Fourth of July; and

Whereas it is fitting that the American people should express their appreciation for the celebration in France of our Independence Day and their admiration for the sublime courage with which the people of France have for nearly four years defended the liberties of the world and give voice to the unalterable determination of America to support the common cause of free nations to the utmost limits of our resources: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States of America hereby tenders fraternal greetings from the people of the United States of America to the people of the Republic of France, and urges all our citizens to observe the national holiday of France, July 14, as a mark of special regard for our associate nation.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of State be directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President of the Republic of France.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I wish to say that I objected to the resolution which the gentleman offered yesterday, but I have no objection to this resolution, which I have seen and which seems peculiarly fit and should be passed by the House, a similar one having been passed by a coordinate branch of Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether this resolution has been submitted to any committee of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not submitted it to any committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say that it is easily within the province and ability of any Member of this House to present a clever, patriotic resolution. He has a right to do it, I suppose. He can be as patriotic as he pleases, but when he introduces a resolution which commits the House of Representatives, and asks for its immediate passage without consideration by a committee, it seems to me he takes liberties with this great body. I am making the statement deliberately because on the Fourth of July a Member of the House rose, offered a resolution which was couched in patriotic terms, which any Member might write, asking unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD. The unanimous consent was not given, although afterwards it appeared in the RECORD. It was one of those "We, the people of the United States," resolves, with certain preambles, that may or may not have comported to the dignity of the House of Representatives.

While I sympathize with what the gentleman from Kentucky has in mind, the resolution which he proposes provides that the Congress of the United States shall, through the Department of State, say so-and-so to the people of France and the world. It remains the literary production of the gentleman from Kentucky, however, and I think it is taking a great liberty with the Congress of the United States to ask that it be adopted, no matter how patriotic, without some deliberation by a committee of this body.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This does not commit the Congress of the United States to anything; it simply is an expression of the House of Representatives. It is similar in tenor to the resolution passed yesterday by the Senate. It does not commit Congress in any respect.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, we have the word of the gentleman from Massachusetts backing up the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, but no committee of this House in a deliberative meeting has determined to recommend a resolution of this kind. Even its accuracy as to grammar has not been scrutinized.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am reserving my objection for the purpose of calling attention to the danger of permitting a Member of the House, whether he be a Democrat, a Socialist, a Republican, or a Prohibitionist, to inject his ideas into a resolution and have them given out to the world as the action of the Congress of the United States. Only a little while ago a resolution was introduced by a Member of the House which resolved that a certain song composed by one of his constituents should be declared the national anthem of the United States. It was dropped in the box, and everybody knows what that means. It means nothing, except that a bill has been introduced, yet the publisher of that song put on the front page that it had been indorsed by the Congress of the United States in the resolution introduced by Mr. So-and-So—a fine advertisement for the gentleman who introduced the resolution. Surely a Member of the House who has a brilliant idea or a patriotic suggestion should be willing to wait a minute or two and let the matter be referred to a committee. The gentleman from Massachusetts may indorse the idea of the gentleman from Kentucky, but even so it ought to be considered by a committee before it goes forth as the action of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not for the present. Having been in session with the Ways and Means Committee for several weeks discussing the question of lobbies and propaganda, I have learned and seen enough of the manner in which so-called patriotic movements start fires under the people of the United States and their Congressmen in the interest of certain selfish interests sometimes that I hesitate before I accept as gospel everything which some Member may introduce in a resolution. Having said what I desired to say, I shall not object to what appears to be a patriotic resolution, but I intend to watch such resolutions hereafter.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, and I should not have said anything in regard to this matter, if it had not been for the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which, I fear, may be misunderstood. The resolution before the House is an eminently proper one, couched in dignified language, similar, at least in its purport, to the resolution which has been adopted in the Senate. To-morrow is the anniversary of the fall of the Bastille, one of the great days in the world's history. I believe every Member of the House is thoroughly in sympathy with the purpose of the resolution, and I hope it will not only be not objected to, but that it will pass by a unanimous vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas, indefinitely, on account of official business; and

To Mr. BUTLER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

PNEUMATIC TUBES.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from the Postmaster General to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, Hon. JOHN A. MOON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing therein a letter from the Postmaster General to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1918.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE MOON: Just a line to congratulate you upon the final outcome of the contest with the pneumatic-tube incubus. Of course, no one knew better than you that this pneumatic-tube service was, from a postal standpoint, utterly inefficient and grossly extravagant, hence absolutely indefensible. You have been antagonizing this imposition upon the Postal Service for many years, and to you more than any other person the Postal Establishment is indebted for the fact that we are at last and for all time free from this unnecessary and unjustifiable burden.

In this connection, I also avail myself of the opportunity to thank you for the splendid services you have rendered the Post Office Department in the improvement of the mail service since you have been chairman of the Post Office Committee. It was largely through your aid that there has been brought about the change in the system of compensating the railroads for mail transportation. For an antiquated, obsolete, uneconomical system requiring quadrennial weighing of the mails by sections, which was not only unsatisfactory but unfair to the department and under which the railroads were afforded grounds for complaint that inadequate compensation was being received for services rendered, there has been substituted a modern system which is thoroughly scientific and under which, when it has been finally approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and a fair rate fixed, the department will be in an attitude where it can call for no more space than is needed for efficient service and can pay for such space no more and no less than a fair rate to be fixed by an impartial tribunal.

The space-basis system is fair and just alike to the Government and the railroads. It relieved the department of a vexatious and what apparently was a perennial controversy with the railroads. With your helpful assistance as chairman of the Post Office Committee, the department has been able to so adjust parcels-post rates and weights as to make this splendid service what you intended it should be when you fathered the parcel post, a beneficent godsend to the masses of the people, who have been quick to avail themselves of its advantages.

It was largely through your efforts that the first step has been taken toward the fixing of an equitable second-class postage rate, under which the department is partly relieved of the burdensome subsidy to magazines and newspapers, against which the various heads of the department have been crying out for years.

Under your administration as chairman efforts have been constantly made, and with a degree of commendable success, to strip the Postal Service of every species of favoritism and privilege, and you are entitled to take much pride and comfort in the fact that our Postal Service to-day is the equal in efficiency if not superior to any in the world.

I feel sure that in the future there will be no abatement of your energy, but that you will continue to give your valuable assistance in bringing about certain other postal reforms which are needed. If we could place post-office appointments for first, second, and third class offices under the classified civil service by the law and thus make permanent the divorcement of the department from all politics; and if we could secure a larger authority under the law for increasing the number of branch post offices, thus effecting not only great economy but a greater simplification of the accounting system; if we could secure authority under law for the department to bond its own employees by a plan of levying a small assessment, thus creating a guaranty fund as security against losses of postal funds; and if we could postalize the telegraphs and telephones, I feel that you could lay down the burden of your chairmanship with a feeling of confidence that certainly never in the past, and probably never in the future, would the record made be surpassed.

Again I want to extend to you, speaking for myself as head of the department and all those who are responsible with me for its proper and efficient conduct, sincere thanks for your splendid and valuable assistance to us.

Your friend, (Signed) A. S. BURLESON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in respect to a misunderstanding about the vote upon the draft and volunteers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what does the gentleman intend to extend his remarks?

Mr. LITTLE. On the draft and volunteers—upon a misunderstanding about the vote.

Mr. BARNHART. To be the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STANDARDIZATION OF SCREW THREADS.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there is upon the Speaker's table a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 10852) providing for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads. That conference report has been on the Speaker's table for some days. The chairman of the committee reporting the bill has been necessarily called from the city and the other members of the conference committee are out of the city at this time. The bill was passed by a practically unanimous vote by both branches of Congress and it is very desirous to have the conference report agreed to and the bill become a law. My inquiry is this: Can any other member of that committee, who was not a member of the conference committee, or can I, as the one who introduced the bill originally, call up the conference report for adoption?

The SPEAKER. It is rather irregular, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman to call it up after we get through with the vote upon the President's veto on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES SUBJECT TO MILITARY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of War, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and to lie upon the Speaker's table:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 11, 1918.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In response to House resolution No. 371, of June 3, 1918, I transmit herewith a list showing the number of men in the service of the War Department at Washington who were on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31 years for whom requests for exemption from military duty or deferred classification have been asked by the department and allowed, the name and home address of each such person, the character of work he is performing, and the length of time he has been in such service; also a similar list of those who have received commissions since date of exemption.

Another list of persons employed in the field service of the department will be submitted as soon as the data therefor can be obtained.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

List showing the number of men in the service of the War Department in the District of Columbia who were on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31 years for whom requests for exemption from military duty or deferred classification have been asked by the department and allowed, the name and home address of each such person, the character of work he is performing, and the length of time he has been in such service.

Name.	Office.	Home address.	Character of work.	Length of time in service.
Daniel A. Garrahan	Secretary of War	Hazleton, Pa	Preparing reports to the Auditor for the War Department of changes submitted in status of civilian employees. Physically disqualified for military service and placed in class 1, limited (for clerical service only), prior to exemption.	Appointed July 5, 1917.
Marquis T. Albertson	The Adjutant General	537 Twenty-first Street NW., Washington, D. C.	By reason of the ability and aptitude displayed by him while an employee of this office, coupled with his great perseverance and close application to duty, Mr. Albertson was placed in charge of the statistical section of the enlisted division of this office about a month ago, then in process of organization, and has had immediate supervision of that section ever since. This section, which now numbers 149 employees, is engaged in the organization work of arranging and numbering enlistment papers and the preparation of the data for the Provost Marshal General necessary in determining the quotas of the several States. It is also engaged upon certain organization work connected with the prompt notification to relatives concerning the fate or whereabouts of our soldiers. This is very important work, is urgently demanded by the public, and Mr. Albertson is the only man in this office who is now available for the supervision of that work, which requires experience, good judgment, and administrative qualities.	Appointed Jan. 3, 1917.
Bert C. Gardner	do	2117 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.	By reason of the ability and aptitude displayed by him while an employee of this office, coupled with his great perseverance and close application to duty, Mr. Gardner has been placed in charge of the arrangement, filing, and active operation of the enlisted records of this office, now in process of preparation, and has immediate supervision of that work. This file, which when completed will constitute a self-indexed record of every enlisted man in the Army, is considered of vital importance in the successful prosecution of the work of the office. Much remains yet to be done in the arrangement of this file before its completion, so that it may be successfully operated in connection with a prompt notification to relatives concerning the fate or whereabouts of our soldiers and expeditiously furnish this and other information regarding them. This information is urgently demanded by the public, and the arrangement of the file is essential to the prompt dispatch of the business of this office. Mr. Gardner is the only man in the office who is now available for the supervision of the work described, which requires experience, good judgment, and administrative qualities, all of which are possessed by him.	Appointed Nov. 1, 1916.
Charles Kothe	do	1436 R Street NW., Washington, D. C.	By reason of the ability and aptitude displayed by him while an employee of this office, coupled with his great perseverance and close application to duty, Mr. Kothe was selected some time ago for the important position of assistant chief of the Mail and Files Division of this office. The position occupied by Mr. Kothe requires of him not only a complete knowledge of the scheme of Army correspondence and its ramifications and details, but experience, good judgment, and administrative qualities, all of which are possessed by him, and he is the most capable man in the office who is now available for the position.	Appointed Feb. 1, 1912.
Edward H. Hess	do	2006 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.	That Edward H. Hess is employed as a clerk in the Miscellaneous Division of this office on the work of enciphering and deciphering cablegrams sent to and received from the American Expeditionary Forces; that he has been thoroughly trained in that work and his services are greatly needed in connection therewith; that the demand for competent code clerks is greater than the supply and that Mr. Hess's absence from the work would seriously interfere with its prompt dispatch; that for these reasons the said Edward H. Hess is necessary to the adequate and effective operation of the Miscellaneous Division of The Adjutant General's Office and can not be replaced by another person without substantial, material loss in the adequate and effective operation of said division.	Appointed May 14, 1917.
Charles Geisenfeld	Quartermaster General	530 Vliet Street, Milwaukee, Wis.	Principal clerk of the Enlisted Branch, Personnel Division, handling all details in connection with the proper operation and administration of the affairs of the Quartermaster Corps, Regular Army, the Quartermaster Corps, National Guard, also supervising a force of 89 clerks.	Appointed Oct. 11, 1911. Resigned Nov. 1, 1916. Reinstated June 5, 1917.
Thomas Bigham	do	Fairfield, Adams County, Pa.	Assigned to duty in office of the chief clerk, handling all matters pertaining to printing and binding for the Quartermaster Corps, advertising and miscellaneous duties connected with the Office Service Branch.	Appointed Aug. 27, 1909.
Raymond E. Read	do	1810 Calvert Street NW., Washington, D. C.	Principal clerk of the Expeditionary Cable Branch, handling all cablegrams to and from Gen. Pershing pertaining to Quartermaster Corps business.	Appointed July, 1911. Resigned Oct. 5, 1916. Reinstated June 1, 1917.

Joseph V. Connolly	Chief of Engineers	Fall River, Mass	In clerical charge of the Fortification and Mapping Section, responsible for the administration of a section containing 15 clerks. Owing to a lack of experienced employees in the section, he is compelled, in addition to the supervisory work properly incumbent on a chief fo division, to handle a very large proportion of the detail work, necessitating a knowledge upon his part of Government accounting, of the constructional details of fortifications, mechanical details of appurtenances, technical details of mapping, and laws and regulations regarding land titles, leases, and licenses affecting Government land, and all other activities of the Engineer Department regarding seacoast fortifications and military mapping.	Appointed Jan. 2, 1912.
Ray W. Ireland	do	Huntington, Huntington County, Ind.	Assistant Chief of the Equipment and Construction Division, comprising about 70 employees. Owing to a lack of experienced employees in this division, Mr. Ireland's services are considered absolutely essential to the conduct of the work.	Appointed Apr. 4, 1913.
Joseph W. Kimbel	do	Riverside, Northumberland County, Pa.	Handles such matters as approval of bridge plans, the granting of permits for wharves, dams, and other structures in navigable waters, and the drafting and enforcement of regulations for such structures and for anchorage and movement of vessels. The frequent emergency applications from both public and private sources for permits of the above character, received in connection with war operations, must be handled with the utmost dispatch and with due regard for existing laws and regulations. This work involves a high order of ability and a knowledge of laws and precedents which can only be acquired as a result of extensive experience. No other employee is available or can be readily trained to handle the duties of Mr. Kimbel.	Appointed July 22, 1913.
Leland H. Schenck	do	Topeka, Kans	Handles all financial matters in the Equipment and Construction Division. The appropriations handled during the current fiscal year aggregate about $400,000,000. These duties require, in addition to greater care and accuracy than is possessed by the average person, a very considerable knowledge of Engineer Department financial methods. No other employee is available or can be readily trained to handle the duties of Mr. Schenck.	Appointed Oct. 29, 1917.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the vote upon the veto of the President of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054). The question is, Shall the House, upon reconsideration, pass the Agricultural appropriation bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Could the House by unanimous consent refer this veto message to the Committee on Agriculture?

The SPEAKER. It could.

Mr. GARNER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the veto message be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. If upon a vote by a call of the roll a quorum should not develop, will the point have to be made?

The SPEAKER. No; the point does not have to be made. The Speaker will make it himself. He is bound to under the Constitution. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 73, nays 173, answered "present" 6, not voting 180, as follows:

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. FARR. I came in just a minute or so too late to answer to my name.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

Mr. FARR. I was unavoidably detained; if I had been here, I would have voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be marked "present."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I have a general pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT. I believe if he were present he would have voted as I have voted, and I shall therefore let my vote stand.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to make a motion?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I shall make my motion later on.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I want to ask leave of absence for my colleague Mr. DENISON, on account of sickness, for the day, if I may. He asked me to state that if present he would have voted "aye" on the roll call just called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

STANDARDIZATION OF SCREW THREADS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 738).

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10852) to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10852) to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert "six months"; and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
E. E. ROBERTS,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. S. KENYON,
W. G. HARDING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10852) to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8: All taken together have the effect of increasing the proposed commission from five to nine members, two from the Army and Navy each instead of one, and two each from the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Automotive Engineers, respectively, instead of one.

On No. 9: Limits the life of the commission to six months instead of one year, as proposed by the House and 60 days proposed by the Senate.

WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
E. E. ROBERTS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask whoever has this report in charge to yield a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] has the conference report in charge.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman what change has been made by the conferees in respect to the length of time. Did not the original bill carry 60 or 90 days?

Mr. SEARS. The original bill, I understand, carried 12 months, and this makes it 6 months.

Mr. WALSH. Now, what is the change made in amendment No. 9?

Mr. SEARS. That is one relating to time, changing it from 12 to 6 months.

Mr. WALSH. What change was made with reference to the make-up of the personnel?

Mr. SEARS. A change from five to nine.

Mr. WALSH. How was that done?

Mr. SEARS. I was not on the conference committee——

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SEARS. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. On account of the fact that I was the original introducer of the bill, I was called into conference by the chairman of the committee, and therefore can speak with some degree of assurance as to the reason for the change. The reason it was done was because it was believed that it would make the commission stronger and more representative to add an additional member from the Army, so that one might cover the Ordnance and one the Quartermaster's Department, and one additional from the Navy, one coming from the Bureau of Steam Engineering and the other from the Bureau of Construction. It was also believed that the two additional engineers from civil life would likewise make the commission stronger. The entire eight amendments, numbers 1 to 8, inclusive, simply affect the provision changing the number from five to nine commissioners.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield me three or four minutes?

Mr. SEARS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the explanation given by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] in reference to the amendments to this bill, and while it is a meritorious project I do not agree with the method of making up this commission, and I submit that we ought not to establish a precedent here of permitting any society of mechanical engineers or automotive engineers or any other private association to participate in naming members of an official commission. The members of any official board ought to be nominated by the officials of this Government, and in this instance we ought not permit private societies to say to the Secretary of Commerce, you shall name certain individuals, who will of course be members of the society upon this important commission, that you must select those two men to serve on this important commission. Now, this commission is to standardize screw threads, and it will undoubtedly make recommendations which will probably be followed by the Army and the Navy and the various other departments of the Government that have to do with its industrial activities, and if we permit these societies to select the experts to represent the various lines of industry or activity in this country we are establishing a bad precedent and a dangerous one, which we ought not to follow. These associations can furnish all the experts they desire, but they should be as witnesses and they ought not to be allowed to name the members of a commission when they will be biased and will no doubt seek only to secure the establishment of the standards adopted or fixed by their society, and they ought not to be permitted to fix a standard and then as members of a Government commission vote to have the Government ratify their action; and I trust that when similar measures come up in the future that the committees having them in charge will not follow the precedent set in this measure and say in making up an official commission to act on behalf of the Government that any private society shall have the right conferred on it to submit certain of its members to the appointing official and in effect say, as in this instance we say to the Secretary of Commerce, "You must appoint these men whom we have selected." In this respect I think this act is faulty, and I think the conferees might well have stricken out any such provision as that, and I am sorry they did not insist on its elimination. I do not, of course, expect that the conference report will be voted down, although it would not be a public calamity if it were not adopted, but I thought attention ought to be directed to this provision and to the precedent which is attempted to be established. I thank the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] for this opportunity to express my opinion.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman, I will say that, as a member of the committee, I took the same stand that he now takes, but the committee decided otherwise, and the Senate increased the number from five to nine. I understand the Secretary of Commerce does not have to appoint unless he wants to do so. This is simply a recommendation. And having been passed on by both Houses, it will only delay the bill now to change it. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE—AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 1229).

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the President's veto message on the Agricultural appropriation bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to refer the President's veto message to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

CONFERENCE REPORT—CHARTER RATES, ETC.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12099 for adoption. It is a bill to confer on the President powers to prescribe charter rates and freight rates, and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes.

RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER. Before we begin on that, the Chair announces that he has a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Georgia announcing the ratification of the prohibition amendment, to be filed in the archives of the House. [Applause.]

CHARTER RATES, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 756).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report on the bill H. R. 12099.

The conference report was read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will not the gentleman ask to have the statement read?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement also be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the statement be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was also read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12099) to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 8, line 11, after the word "the," strike out the words "title to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "use"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12099) to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

On No. 1: The House receded. Under section 3 of the act as it passed the House all power and authority vested in the President or by him delegated and all restrictions imposed in this act shall cease upon the proclamation of the final treaty of peace between the United States and the Imperial German Government: Provided, That if, in the judgment of the President, the tonnage shortage at such time is so severe that national interests of the United States are jeopardized he may, by proclamation, extend the provisions of this act for a further period of six months. The Senate amendment agreed to in conference extends the period of time to nine months instead of six months, as provided in section 3 of the bill as it passed the House.

On amendment No. 2: The House receded from its disagreement. The effect of this amendment is to require the freight rates and the terms and conditions of affreightment which shall govern the transportation of goods on vessels of the United States to be filed with the United States Shipping Board and open to public inspection.

On amendment No. 3: The House receded from its disagreement and agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows: On page 8, line 11, after the word "the," strike out the words "title to " and insert in lieu thereof the word "use." The effect of this amendment is to vest in the President the power only to lease or to requisition the use or temporary possession of, or to assume temporary control of, any dry docks, wharves, or loading or discharging terminal facilities, in any port of the United States, etc. The power of the President to acquire by purchase for the purposes named is eliminated from section 13 of the bill.

On amendments Nos. 4 and 5: The Senate receded. The effect of which is to restore the penal provisions of section 16 as it passed the House.

On amendment No. 6: The House receded from its disagreement. This amendment adds a provision to section 16 of the bill providing that the district court of the Canal Zone shall have jurisdiction of offenses committed against the provisions of the act within the Canal Zone. The advisability of this provision is apparent.

J. W. ALEXANDER,
RUFUS HARDY,
G. W. EDMONDS,
L. H. HADLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman if the effect of amendment 3, as agreed to by the conferees, is simply to limit the authority of the President to requisition the use of these facilities and not to acquire by eminent domain title to the actual physical property?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. That is the purpose and the effect of the amendment agreed to. That is, we agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment, the effect of which is to do that.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think with that power, or the authority through which he will exercise this jurisdiction, the President will have sufficient authority to utilize these facilities to the best advantage?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The counsel for the Shipping Board were of the opinion that the provision as framed in the conference report would be sufficient. And it is not the purpose of the Shipping Board in any event to purchase these facilities. The only purpose is to utilize them during the time this act may be in effect and not acquire any of them by purchase.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. With amendment No. 1 you have limited the time after the proclamation of peace to nine months instead of six months, as proposed by the House. But the statement does not set forth what the Senate provision was. Was not the Senate provision for a considerably longer time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. When the bill was reported to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Commerce it was 18 months, but on the floor of the Senate it was amended and limited to 9 months.

Mr. WALSH. And the conferees adopted the Senate provision?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The conferees agreed to the nine months' provision. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman presses that, may I inquire of him whether there is any agreement reached as to limitation of debate?

Mr. SIMS. There is not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman feel that at this time it would be in order for him to make some motion to the House looking to the limitation of general debate?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, while the water-power bill has been considered during a portion of two days, there was only 1 hour and 15 minutes used the first day and only 1 hour and 22 minutes the second day, all used by myself, and so far as I am concerned, I would not want to have to limit the debate.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to limit debate in the sense of cutting off all debate. I think the House is entitled to know something about what we are going to do, whether we are going to drive on indefinitely with general debate or whether we are going to have consideration of the bill and action by the House on it.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is entitled to 3 hours and 38 minutes before we are entitled to any further time. I will be glad to confer with him as soon as he has used his time, and see the number of inquiries that he has got and what I have and try to agree to a limitation on general debate at that time.

Mr. SHERLEY. May we have the assurance that the gentleman will, when he next moves to go into committee, make a request touching the limitation of debate?

Mr. SIMS. I will confer with the members of the special Water Power Committee and determine what I shall do after conferring with them.

Mr. SHERLEY. But some of us might want to make a motion now.

Mr. SIMS. I have no power to make a motion now.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Tennessee any request to make?

Mr. SIMS. Not at this time.

Mr. ESCH. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that later this afternoon we will probably come to some limitation of time, but it would not be proper to do it now, as this side has not had any time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to deny reasonable debate.

Mr. ESCH. I think we can come to some arrangement later on.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is entitled to use 3 hours and 38 minutes before any further time is yielded on this side.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that. I want him to have that time, but under the rules he is entitled to recognition for an hour.

Mr. SIMS. Under the agreement between the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself we control the time half and half.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the House?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and I have used 3 hours and 38 minutes on this side, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the same amount of time.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, when I yielded the floor yesterday for the consideration of the President's veto of the wheat price-fixing provision, and with it the Agricultural appropriation bill, I was about to remark that this bill is, in my judgment, one of the most important pieces of legislation that has been before the House for many years, and that if we could work out a comprehensive plan under which the millions of potential horsepower energy now running to waste in the rivers and streams throughout the various States of the Union could be developed and utilized for the benefit and comfort of mankind we would have performed a service second to none, and worthy to rank with the highest, rendered by any previous Congress in our history.

Mr. Chairman, as important a matter of legislation as is this should not be entered on with any misleading or erroneous assumption of facts. We should each and every one charge ourselves with the duty of giving it most careful and comprehensive consideration, and this for several good and sufficient reasons. First, we should fully understand the genesis of the legislation, the reason for its coming into being, the need for its enactment, and why this or some similar mode of procedure is necessary of adoption if we ever hope for water-power development in the United States. Secondly, is this character of legislation wise? Is it sound in principle, sane in its premises; and what is most important of all if we would not have our labors for naught and bring ourselves under criticism and derision, will it stand the test of constitutionality in the highest courts of the land? Third, is its enactment good public policy and a justifiable expedient for the procuring of development?

Mr. Chairman, before touching on these essential propositions I have mentioned, I desire to say that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who filed the minority report, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. SIMS] are evidently proceeding under an entirely different assumption of fact and theory for the creation of this bill and the Government's relationship to it, than does the Member who is now addressing you. They seem to approach it from the viewpoint of the Government being a supreme proprietor and we, as legislators, working out a plan whereby she can provide for development, through private individuals, of her properties. The gentleman from Oklahoma, on the last page of the reports from committee on this bill, among other things, says:

I deny that it is the correct principle for the Federal Government to first grant away the most valuable of all its resources, and then by ponderous, cumbersome, provisions make its recapture and retaking nonfeasible if not impossible.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would be the last man in this House to raise a question as to the soundness of that enunciation if I thought the gentleman had even a questionable legal right for his assumption. I know these gentlemen to be honest and earnest in their desire to safeguard from their viewpoint the people as a Federalized Government. But, Mr. Chairman, after a careful and painstaking study of the Constitution of the United States, and after reading most carefully many United States Supreme Court findings and decisions, as well as many State court decisions, I have been compelled to conclude that the Federal Government's having any proprietary rights superior to any other riparian owner, with the exception of freedom from taxation, in what the gentleman designates as "the most valuable of all its resources," is romance, pure and simple.

Mr. Chairman, we have here the Constitution of the United States. I am very desirous of instruction and information. I will be pleased for the gentleman from Oklahoma, or any other gentleman who shares his ideas as to the Federal Government's proprietary rights, to kindly call to my attention the particular article and section of the Constitution that confers on the Federal Government any proprietary rights in the streams, lakes, or harbors of the United States, or any amendment to the Constitution that does so. It is true that under Article IV, section 3, paragraph 2, we find the following language:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, or of any particular State.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Supreme Court, in decision after decision, has enunciated the opinion that this provision of the Constitution does not imply nor show that the Federal Government has any proprietary rights as to water, or to bed or bank, of any stream in these United States, either in navigable or nonnavigable streams. In the House Manual and Digest, under the paragraph of the Constitution which I have just read, there are some 38 United States Supreme Court citations, many of them touching on this very question of proprietary rights. In Martin v. Waddell (16 Pet., 410), Chief Justice Taney said in part:

When the Revolution took place the people of each State became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them for their common use, subject only to the right since surrendered by the Constitution to the General Government.

In the case of Pollard, lessee, v. Hagan (3 How., 229), the court, after quoting the above statement, said:

Then, to Alabama belong the navigable waters and soils under them in controversy in this case, subject to the rights surrendered by the Constitution to the United States, and no compact that might be made could diminish or enlarge these rights.

The court concludes the opinion in that case in these words:

By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First, the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the Untied States, but were reserved to the States, respectively. Secondly, the new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States. Thirdly, the right of the United States to the public lands and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land in controversy in this case.

Mr. Chairman, there are dozens of Supreme Court decisions upholding the States' sovereignty and right of control of the water, beds, and banks of navigable and nonnavigable streams, lakes, and tidal bays. The very latest Supreme Court decision on this question contains in part this language: (October term, 1916, 243 U. S., 316. Syllabus. United States v. Cross. United States v. Kelly et al. Error to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky. Nos. 84, 718. Argued Dec. 13, 1916. Decided Mar. 12, 1917.)

The States have authority to establish for themselves such rules of property as they may deem expedient with respect to the streams of water within their borders, both navigable and nonnavigable, and the ownership of the lands forming their beds and banks (Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 338; Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661, 671; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 382; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 40, 58; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. St. Paul Water Commissioners, 168 U. S. 349, 358), subject, however, in the case of navigable streams, to the paramount authority of Congress to control the navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations (Shibely v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 40; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 272; Scott v. Lattig, 227 U. S. 229, 243); the exercise of this authority being subject, in its turn, to the inhibition of the fifth amendment against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation (Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 336; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 471).

This decision was rendered March 12, 1917, and fully sustains the States' power and sovereignty over water, bed, and banks of all character of streams.

Decisions by the hundred can be produced to sustain the contention that section 3, paragraph 2, of Article IV, of the Constitution, infers no such proprietary rights in the Federal Government. The syllabus of the case known as Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46–92), expresses the situation and status of the United States clearly and succinctly. It reads in part:

The Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers; that it has no inherent powers of sovereignty; that the enumeration of the powers granted is to be found in that alone; that the manifest purpose of the tenth amendment to the Constitution is to put beyond dispute the proposition that all the powers not granted are reserved to the people, and that if in the changes of the years further powers ought to be possessed by Congress they must be obtained by a new grant from the people. While Congress has general legislative jurisdiction over the Territories and may control the flow of waters in their streams, it has no power to control a like flow within the limits of a State, except to preserve or improve the navigability of the stream; that the full control over these waters is, subject to the exception named, vested in the State.

And later on it says:

It is useless to pursue the inquiry further in this direction. It is enough for the purposes of this case that each State has full jurisdiction over the lands within its borders, including the beds of streams and other waters.

Mr. Chairman, Article I, section 8, paragraph 3, contains what is known as the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, which reads:

[Congress shall have power] to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

It is under that provision that we concede the Government's power and right to maintain jurisdiction over navigable waters of the United States for the purposes of navigation and the improvement thereof; and that clause confers no property rights whatever upon the United States, nor does it confer any supervisory right upon the United States for any other purpose than that of navigation, a contention, Mr. Chairman, that has been decided affirmatively for so long a period that it is needless to enlarge on it. The United States is simply the trustee of the States, to preserve and see that the general navigation rights of all are equally protected, and, when necessary, improved to insure the usableness of those avenues of commerce and trade "with foreign nations, between the States, and with the Indian tribes." This and nothing more.

This, Mr. Chairman, brings me back to my first premise: That we should understand the genesis of this legislation; the reason for its coming into being and need for its enactment.

We have for many years been trying to develop more or less power from rushing or falling water in many States of the Union, and many power possibilities would have long ago been developed and be giving service to man if it were not for a divided authority. While the right of water control and the ownership and jurisdiction of bed and banks of our watercourses are admittedly in the States, the jurisdiction over the navigation of all streams being in the Government the States could not well pass laws conferring upon private individuals rights to build dams across the streams, because the Government could intervene and stop proceedings under the plea of control of navigation.

It is true that some of the States have granted such rights, and dams have been built, and their legality upheld by the courts, and there have been many interesting questions raised and decisions rendered; but time forbids my going into that phase of this question.

Building dams and developing water powers is usually a hazardous and costly undertaking. Men will not engage in it on uncertainties. Consequently with indefiniteness of tenure and occupation created by dual or divided authority but little development has been made. Under pressure for something to be done to make development possible the Interior Department, without any legal status other than the act of February 15, 1901, United States Statutes, chapter 372, "relating to rights of way through certain parks, reservations, and other public lands," put into effect a system of revocable permits where such lands were involved. The gentleman from Oklahoma, in his minority report, refers to our operating under that system. It would have been interesting had he seen fit to put in a table showing how many such permits have been granted, how many so-called horsepower have been developed under that system, and how many millions of dollars have been invested subject to the revocation at will by some political appointee. He did not do so, and I think he himself would have been surprised had he made an investigation. For all practical purposes there has been no development whatever under that system; any plants built under such a system necessarily being restricted to those whose projectors had their own capital or could give other security than the plant if they borrowed money for the enterprise. The law referred to as appertaining to navigable streams also hampers, but would not deter capital as does the one where the lands above the bank are public domain. Court decisions can be found justifying the belief that the Government would not be allowed to revoke licenses at will, but only where navigation needs were imperative, making the destruction of the plant a necessity—a remote possibility. The builders would naturally build in such a way as to make that risk a negligible quantity. However, there has been but little development under that provision of law. Capital demands and will have certainty of tenure and definite assurances as to its human liabilities. To expect anything else is unwarranted and not justified by commercial principles and practices of the decades and centuries gone by.

This bill is brought here because it is apparent that we can get no development under a divided authority, and development is needed. Our not having greater development is inexcusable on any other ground than lack of grasp of the situation and inability to cope with it. This bill is not based on either the Government's ownership or its sovereign authority, but on the hypothesis that we as representatives of the States have authority to act for the States in matters of this character and pass laws for the general good, by the establishment of a limited trusteeship or commission composed of officials of the Government, to carry out and administer this law in such a way as not to infringe any of the rights of the States nor to impede or restrict navigation, but rather to benefit it. The commission is composed of the Secretary of War, who has supervisory control over all navigable streams for the purposes of navigation alone; the Secretary of the Interior, who has control of the public domain and of the power sites on such domain; and the Secretary of Agriculture, who has administrative control of all power sites in forest reserves. The three working together can harmonize all questions involving Federal interests, and under the proposed law the would-be licensee is supposed to have procured all concessions and necessary powers of the State or States in which the proposed project is situated before a license can be issued, thus harmonizing State and Federal interests, making development possible without either transgressing the sovereign powers of the States or conferring on the Federal Government any plenary power not contemplated by the Constitution. Under this bill we only allow the commission a supervisory power over those functions entirely within the State's jurisdiction for the period covered by any license, the State having exercised its rights in advance of issue.

I think legislation of this character is wise and worthy of fair trial in view of the fact that under present conditions no development is possible. I think the legislation will prove to be sound in principle and sane in provisions as it comes from the committee, and, what is of transcendent importance, it will, with possibly one or two changes, stand the test as to constitutionality. Unless it will pass that test, to pass it would be futile.

Is the passing of this kind of legislation good public policy? I think it is. There has been a widespread demand for State and National supervision over all natural and national resources. The Government is attempting to apply that principle to the resources of various kinds on and in the public domain. Various bills have been introduced, some of which have passed either the House or the Senate, and in one case—Alaska coal lands—both, for the leasing of oil deposits, coal deposits, phosphates, and sodium, and so forth. By the enactment of this bill we shall be able to develop our water powers, recognizing the States' rights as to water, bed, and bank control. Their public-utilities commissions will control the matter of rates charged for service, and the plants will be entirely subject to State laws as to taxation, and so forth.

Under this bill the State abrogates none of its powers or rights. Section 9 distinctly provides that satisfactory evidence must be given that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes, and with respect to the right to engage in the business of developing, transmitting, and distributing power, and in any other business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act.

Mr. Chairman, I propose at the proper time to offer to amend this paragraph, page 35, in line 4, after the word "to," by adding the words "bed and banks and," so it will read:

Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the law of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to bed and banks and the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes—

And so forth.

If we make it one of the conditions precedent to the procuring of a license that the applicant has complied with the requirements of State law as to bed, banks, diversion, and use of water, we are most assuredly not infringing any State's right in that respect, but are definitely insisting that the State's rules of property as to water, bed, and banks must have been fully complied with or license can not issue.

Under the bill the Government does not pay a dollar for the recapture at the end of any license period of any Government land it has licensed in connection with any water-power development, nor does the value of such land, rights of way over Government land, good will, or going value figure in the net investment settlement. We do, however, make as one of the conditions precedent to the acceptance of a license the relinquishment and sale of any vested or riparian rights the licensee may have at the end of his license period to the United States if it elects to buy the plant; and said riparian right, land, and so forth, must be sold to the Government at its actual reasonable cost to the licensee at the time of its acquisition. This is quite a drastic provision. In the 50 years his investment in land might increase a hundredfold. The licensee, in order to get a license and permission to carry out some idea for his present betterment, must contract that his heirs and assigns will accept the original cost of any land he uses in connection with the plant, the accrued value, if any, going to the Government. In addition to this concession made by the applicant desiring to engage in the development of water power, there are gentlemen here, like the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee, who think that, in addition to the conditions precedent to securing a license already mentioned, we should have added yet another condition, making it possible for some agency not provided for in the original draft to place on the property of every description owned by the licensee needed and used in connection with the project apart from the land such value as in the province of that agency is considered fair, not to exceed actual cost of the property taken.

The Government can, if it so elects, take over the property. If it is a good thing, the Government takes it; otherwise it does not have to. It likewise takes such part of the licensee's private lands used in connection with the plant as it elects, at the reasonable cost of the land to the original licensee. Not satisfied with this great advantage conferred on the Government by the elective feature of this bill, it is proposed to take his plant over, regardless of its earning capacity, at such a proportion of its physical value as some agency may pronounce fair. Mr. Chairman, there are some men in this country, no doubt, who would erect power plants under that provision, knowing they would be dead when the time for a possible partial confiscation of their property rolled round; but such men would, I judge, be few and far between. Any man who had any respect for his own ideas of business and a square deal to his successors and assigns would rebel at such an uncertain provision and refuse to put his money at hazard.

That is not all. Most of the large projects in the United States are beyond the financial ability of most corporations and individuals; they have got to interest houses that make a business of bonding commercial enterprises and selling the bonds to investors. Such houses do not do business on sentiment or theory, and under the uncertain term of "fair value," with all chance for accretions in value of lands, franchises, and so forth, eliminated by the terms of the license itself, no bond house in the United States that thinks anything of its reputation would loan a dollar for the construction of any plant. If we place that provision in the bill, in my judgment the fifty-five estimated millions of horsepower in the United States yet undeveloped will run unmolested to the sea, wasting energy enough each year to conserve 50 per cent of the coal burned in the United States for all purposes if we could utilize that waste. I have heard men say they would rather it would so waste than to fall into the hands of monopolists. I do not think that there are any chances to take on monopoly under this bill. If any monopoly or extortion is practiced under it anywhere in the United States, it will be the fault of the States and not the commission. We can not guarantee either the efficiency or sufficiency of State utilities commissions and their powers under their laws to control monopolies. The entire matter is in their hands, and should be. Mr. Chairman, the term "net investment" is not justly subject to the criticism made on it in the minority report here. In section 9, paragraph C, of the bill, is a provision that makes it incumbent on the licensee, in the case of a navigable stream, to keep the project works in repair adequate for the purposes of navigation and for the efficient operation of the works for the purposes created, to make all necessary renewals and replacements, and the licensee is compelled to keep an adequate depreciation reserve for that purpose. Subsection F, of section 4, on page 30, provides similar safeguards for other projects.

Mr. Chairman, I again desire to call attention to the minority report and some of the unwarranted contentions contained therein. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] clearly intimates that the committee was alone responsible for changing from fair value to net investment in what is known as the recapture provision of the bill. The facts are that both terms came from the Secretaries, and no member of this committee was responsible for the change. A large majority of the committee agreed with the Secretaries that the first term was too uncertain and that under such a term there was little probability of development. I hope no Member of the House will allow himself to be prejudiced by a misunderstanding in regard to this change of phraseology and as to who was primarily responsible for the change. The minority report, under the subheading, "Comments on the net-investment amendment," the very first premise set forth by the gentleman is simply a word painting without one scintilla of evidence to warrant the assertion. The gentleman characterizes the recapture provision wherein we provide for the Government's taking over the private property of the licensee by paying the net investment as "prescribing in advance the measurement of damages the Government should pay in the event of retaking." Retaking what? Neither the Government nor the State ever had any part of the physical property to be taken under this provision of net investment. It is the property of the licensee, and we, instead of taking it by paying him a measure of damages for the retaking of something we had licensed or transferred, are arbitrarily, if we so elect, taking it over at cost, and we are not allowing the licensee one "sou markee" as a measure of damages for severing him from his property. He has to submit to it without damages, regardless of its earning value or enhanced market value, because he agreed to as a condition precedent when he accepted the license.

Gentlemen, let us keep these matters straight in our minds. If we do, we will be better able to do justice to the people who through this commission will grant permission for the development of water-power projects and to those citizens who put their money at hazard when they undertake the enterprise. Surely one is as much entitled to the square deal as the other.

The gentleman, Mr. FERRIS, says again under the same heading that the Government becomes an absolute insurer of all the money invested in the water-power plant. This is simply a mistake. The Government insures nothing. The Government has given nothing. The Government had actually nothing to give, unless it would be land, the title of which is in the Government, and she pays not one cent for its return at the end of the license period. Neither does she need to take over any plant unless it is valuable and a good thing. Then she arbitrarily takes it under the law by the paying of net investment, and the finding as to net investment and the keeping the property up to the value of the net investment is under the supervision of our own commission. They do not share the gentleman's fears and forebodings in regard to this provision. They each and every one indorse it as more practical and just than the other, and they also realize that under the uncertain provision, championed by the gentleman but discarded by the Secretaries, there would probably be no development whatever. And they and the President of the United States, under whose direction they originally drafted the outline for this legislation, are really desirous of water-power development.

The gentleman, Mr. FERRIS, further states in his report under the same heading:

> It requires as a condition precedent to any retaking of the property that the full net investment shall be returned to the water-power developer, and this is true even though the water-power developer has used the property and received profits and dividends from it for the full life of the lease, covering a period of 50 years.

Are you gentlemen willing to subscribe to the proposition that in case you have developed and made valuable a piece of property, worthless until developed, and have made a profit out of it for a term of years, you should agree in advance to take such part of the principal you invested, in making this former thing of waste a thing of value, as is adjudged fair by some undefined method of appraisement? How many gentlemen here would invest money under a proposition of that kind? Not one of you, in my judgment, would do so. We should not expect others to do what we would not do ourselves. We will not ask it if we expect and desire development.

The further remark under the same comment on net investment goes on to say:

> This is also true even though the property has become dilapidated, obsolete, and worthless. It is also true even though the property has never been a going concern and would not have any value whatever to the city, county, State, or Government that sought to bring about its retaking that as a condition precedent to any retaking of the property the full net investment must be paid therefor.

Mr. Chairman, if it were possible under this bill for the property to get into the condition described without the people's own commission being responsible for it, the lugubrious condition described by the gentleman might be a scarehead, but it would be a sad commentary on both the State in which the project was located and on the Nation whose secretaries as a commission would permit the property to get into such a condition. I do not think the gentleman read and digested this bill very carefully before he filed his minority report or he would not have made it. If he had read subsection F of section 4, and subsection C of section 9 in connection with sections 25 and 26 of the bill, he would see that the commission would have to be very derelict in its duties for any property they license to get in the condition described. The bill provides a method for getting rid of such licensees, and the criticism of the net investment feature by the method pursued in the minority report is camouflage, pure and simple.

This is a bill which needs careful study and digestion before too hasty an opinion is passed on it. I have great hopes of some real development being accomplished under it if we can once get it in operation. Remember that under the recapture clause we only recapture the franchise and site, if the title to the site is in the Government. If the Government desires to become the operator of the plant, we capture by paying actual reasonable original cost any land and riparian rights the licensee owns, and the net investment he has made in the plant. The licensee as a condition precedent has developed a useless unused possibility and made it something of value. This he has got to give up at the end of his license period if the commission so elects. I do not see how under those conditions we can object to his getting back the original capital he put at hazard, which has been subject to the supervision of the commission all the time.

Mr. Chairman, it might be better, as some men seem to think, if all jurisdiction as to water, bed, and banks of streams was in the Federal Government instead of in the States. If it were so there would be no complication caused by a conflicting authority. We, however, have to legislate under conditions as we find them.

Mr. Chairman, I have had the honor of being a Member of the House of Representatives for almost eight years. During the time I have been here there have been many water-power bills introduced, most of them general in character but some few individual in scope.

To the best of my recollection now, but one of those bills ever crystallized into law. That was a bill for an extension of time for the commencing of a water-power project on the Pend Oreille River in what was then Stevens, now Pend Oreille County, Wash. The bill for said extension was introduced by myself.

The site for the dam was unfortunately in a forest reserve. The gentlemen comprising the company put in much time here in Washington City in conference with the Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of the administrative features of forest reserves, and with the Secretary of the Interior, who has the disposal, contractual or otherwise, of all public lands whether in or out of forest reserves; and after many conferences a water-power development permit was executed by the Secretary of the Interior, and under that permit the grantees tried to finance their project, but to no purpose. They could not find a financier in the United States who would loan them a dollar for the building of a foundation and dam or works under their grant.

Handicapped with a revocable permit for the use of the site above the banks they had to tie their dam to, the financiers of the country were quite sure the Secretary's permit was not worth the dam. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman know what amount of capital would have been necessary for that project?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not, but it was to be a very costly project and a very valuable one.

The gentlemen who received the only water-power grant made by Congress since I have been a Member had to see their franchise lapse and suffer great financial loss because the Congress of the United States had failed to pass a law that would allow the erection of water-power projects and make it possible for grantees to procure capital for development and construction purposes thereunder.

Mr. SMALL. Would the gentleman state the conditions that were imposed in that permit?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I could not offhand. It contained extensive rules and regulations, including a recapture clause; and the Secretary had supervision over all their activities, and could call them to book at any time. But the main thing was the revocable clause, revocable at will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think that permit was inserted in the water-power hearings of the last Congress.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was published at the end of a report on some bill considered by the House.

Mr. SMALL. Which bill was that? Was it the bill known as the Ferris bill—the hearings on that bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, for many years the United States, through its Congress, passed most liberal land laws and was equally liberal with possessions of every character on and in the Public Domain. And the administrative officers construed the laws passed by Congress in a spirit of liberality, with the result that barren wastes were made habitable, States were hewn from wildernesses and an empire such as the world had never witnessed was founded in an incredibly short time, and this Nation expanded more than thirtyfold in but little over a century. States, counties, and municipalities vied with each other in soliciting capital, both domestic and foreign, to enter their respective domains and assist in the development of field, of mine, of forest, of water power, and every line of development known to man. Most liberal inducements were made by municipalities, by counties, by States, and by the United States. Under this great stimulus development was enormous, and abuses naturally followed, and as corporate wealth increased and grew fat from, in many cases mistaken, liberality, it began to dawn on the public that it was time to call a halt; that it was not good public policy to allow certain natural resources that should be enjoyed and controlled in perpetuity for the benefit of all our people to go untrammeled into the hands of a few who could abuse their control of them by extorting from the public unholy profits to which they were not morally or ethically entitled.

The cry of "Stop thief" was raised, and raged with great violence for a decade, with the result that our Government, through timberland withdrawals, power-site withdrawals, coal-land withdrawals, and other withdrawals of various kinds, backed up by Congress, always alert to what it thinks the people want, swung to the other extreme, and for a decade or more now there has been practically no development of water power, of coal lands, and other Government-controlled possibilities throughout the great West and in the Territory of Alaska, with the natural result following, that within a short time our expanding commerce and trade, our manufactories and internal development had drawn so heavily on coal and oil properties already developed as to cause a rapid increase in price of those commodities, and in many localities an even worse hardship—that of not receiving an adequate supply or none at all.

I have watched for years the pendulum swing from excess of liberality to a worse extreme of niggardliness, and, like the dog in the manger, we could or would not eat the hay ourselves, neither would we allow the horse to eat it. We would not, and no doubt wisely not, develop our water powers ourselves, neither would we pass laws under which private capital properly regulated could safely be invested in water-power development.

I have watched the pendulum swing from one extreme to the other, and I have been hopefully waiting for it to swing back to the happy medium, with the hope that the people of the present day might derive some of the great blessings stored up for the use of mankind in our streams and rivers running from the watersheds and mountain fastnesses of our broad land, in most cases as yet unharnessed, to the sea.

We are burning up millions of tons of coal and other millions of gallons of oil for fuel and power purposes that could have in a large part been conserved had we only made use of the millions of horsepower energy that could have been developed from our waterfalls and rapids, which once developed are there practically in perpetuity, and thus made our coal and oil supply last many decades longer for purposes not suitable for handling by hydroelectric energy.

I sincerely hope we are seeing the dawn of a happy-medium day, and that this bill will become a law, and under it many, many million kilowatts of power will be developed and put to beneficial use, and I am confident that those uses will be expanded to an extent hardly realized by any of us. I prognosticate that hydroelectric energy, properly applied, will in the days to come prove to be the greatest blessing of all those applied by man from nature's storehouse to human use.

Mr. Chairman, competent authorities have estimated that within the United States there are some sixty-one millions of potential horsepower energy in our waterfalls and rapids. The State of Washington, which I have the honor to represent in part, is credited with some ten million seven hundred thousand of said horsepower, or between one-fifth and one-sixth of the total, and, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that to that 10,000,000 of horsepower could be added half as much again and then not exaggerate the potential horsepower possibilities of the State of Washington. And of all that enormous energy stored there by Omnipotence, but 291,000 horsepower have ever been utilized.

Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States has built some wonderful reservoirs for the impounding of water for irrigation purposes, which are going to be of immense value to man. There will be many great reservoirs built in connection with hydroelectric-energy development, but, gentlemen, none of them will ever compare with the great natural reservoirs that have been erected by the Almighty himself in the great States of Oregon and Washington. [Applause.] We have within the confines of those two States more mammoth mountain peaks covered with millions upon millions of tons of perpetual snow and ice than are within the confines of the same amount of territory probably on the face of the globe.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not now. The gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that down from those great reservoirs pour hundreds of small streams, and in those streams are many millions of potential horepower energy that have never yet been figured on at all as water-power factors. They, of course, are figured on when they are merged into a few great streams with falls and rapids, but they are capable of many more horsepower before reaching those points because of their faster fall and immense precipitation.

Mr. Chairman, there is energy enough running to waste in my State of Washington to pump water onto every acre of our arid lands not capable of irrigation by natural flow, and in addition turn all the wheels of commerce that will ever be erected in that State, and light and heat every home and building in city, country, and town within its confines, electrify all its railroads, street cars, and riding vehicles, do all the work in forest, field, and home that can be done by mechanical power, and then have electric energy galore to transmit by long-distance wire to States not so happily situated. Of all the States in the Union, Washington is, I think, the most vitally interested in the passage of safe and sane water-power legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WHALEY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to safeguard the public, both present and future, but I do not want to see us attempt to safeguard the future to such an extent as to continually prevent development within the present, thus denying to present generations blessings and comforts they are entitled to on the theory that our posterity are not going to be as smart or wise as we are, consequently not as able to look out for their own interests. I am willing to grant that they will be at least as wise as we, and I sincerely hope much wiser. Let us have some development within the decades yet to be enjoyed by those now born and not leave it all for development by the unborn millions to follow. They will probably be able to improve on our methods and add largely to the blessings we bequeath to them.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thank the gentleman, but I was not aware of the fact that he was pressed for time.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The gentleman is acquainted with the fact that there is a rapidly growing sentiment in the West for municipally owned hydroelectric plants. Does the gentleman think the provisions in the bill—the provisions that the bill carries—will stimulate the growth of municipally owned plants of that character?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say yes. It gives them, providing they exercise the right to take out a permit, a preference right over any private individual or corporation.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The gentleman looks with favor upon that class of operated hydroelectric plants?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do. Wherever the interests of the public are best served by it, I think it is just as well and better to give it to the municipality than it would be to give it to private individuals to do the same thing.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. And it is the opinion of the gentleman further, if I may ask the question, that the provisions now relating to municipally owned plants are as favorable as the committee could report, having the facts in view?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. There were several on the committee who were particularly interested in that phase, and they tried to put in everything that the committee would stand for.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, let me supplement his answer. I will say to the gentleman from Washington that I tried very hard indeed to get favorable provisions inserted in this bill for municipally owned plants, and I was unsuccessful in doing so before this committee. I hope the sentiment of the House may join with me in providing amendments to this bill that will bring about what the gentleman intimates that he would favor, and I am exceedingly in favor of encouraging and at least making it possible for the municipalities to own their plants, and I feel that this bill as it now stands gives but mighty little encouragement to that laudable ambition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman intends to offer amendments to that effect?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I intend to offer amendments not only to make it possible, but to give them a preference right to acquire water power, and I am going to do my utmost to try to get the House to adopt amendments of that kind.

Mr. MILLER of Washingon. I want to assure the gentleman from Colorado that those of us who have looked with favor upon municipally owned plants, particularly those that have been successful in the West, will be glad to have the cooperation of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, the committee thought that the gentleman, in his zeal and desire to get development by municipalities, was trying to encroach on what was or should be the equal rights of individuals, and the committee could not altogether agree with the gentleman as to some of the desired provisions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not admit that an individual or a corporation has an equal right with a municipality to own a water-power site. I feel that the municipality, the citizens themselves, ought to have a preference right over any corporation in the water power for their own municipal uses, and that was the bone of contention before the committee on which they were divided.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I want to express myself as thoroughly in accord with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] on that subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield the floor, thanking the committee for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to have so splendid an audience before me as I proceed to the discussion of this highly important legislation. Not all of the Members are here, it is true, but such as are here represent the flower of this legislative body. [Applause.] And they are the gentlemen whom I particularly desire to address in this connection.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. "The gentleman" will yield to "the Senator from Nebraska." [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. I think the audience thoroughly reciprocates the sentiments of the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is a truthteller.

Mr. Chairman, first, I want to discuss this measure from the standpoint of the West, and particularly of the intermountain West, the section of the West whose water-power possibilities are almost wholly on nonnavigable streams. I have the honor to represent one of the very few States in the Union that never get into a river and harbor bill because of the fact that it is impossible by the most extraordinary stretch of imagination to bring any of our beautiful streams within the category of navigable waters.

Speaking from the standpoint of the intermountain and the Pacific west, so far as their water-power development is from nonnavigable streams, I must say that I regret that the water-power development of that character is to be brought within the jurisdiction of the commission provided for in this bill. I shall support the bill, however, because I realize that the views that many of us hold with regard to these matters do not seem to be the views of the majority of the Congress, and therefore we are for the legislation, though we do not think it aptly applies to our situation as the best legislation obtainable. What we ought to have and all we need in all the public-land States for power development on nonnavigable streams is a good right-of-way act, an extension of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891, to include the uses of water for the development of power and the restoration of the lands now reserved as power sites. Under such a right-of-way act, now applicable to practically all other uses of water, such as irrigation, municipal, and domestic uses, we would have a large development unhampered and unvexed by Federal authority.

The Federal Government controls no water in that section and in such streams, whatever may be the character of its authority elsewhere. The waters belong to the people of the States and the only property that the Federal Government has is land; generally land of no great value lying along the borders of the nonnavigable streams. The only reason why Uncle Sam still continues to own those lands is because they are of so little value that succeeding waves of homestead settlement have passed them by because settlers have not considered it worth while to acquire them. Otherwise the Federal Government would own but little land in that section needed for water-power development. And while this is true, the further fact is true that, except on the forest reserves and in the higher areas of the forest reserves particularly, comparatively little of the land that will be utilized for much of the hydroelectric development is public land.

But the plan and purpose of those who for many years have been endeavoring to extend Federal control over water-power development of that sort and kind is to utilize the necessary use of small areas, fragments of the public lands in connection with power development as an excuse for bringing the entire development under Federal control. The land so used may be only a narrow strip of broken, rock-bound hills, over which it may be necessary to carry a ditch or pipe line, or perhaps a strip of comparatively worthless public land over which it may be necessary to carry a power line. Taking advantage of this situation, the necessity which exists in some places for the utilization of a considerable amount of public land, but in the majority of instances of a limited amount of public land compared with the entire area used for the development, it is proposed to bring these enterprises under the same jurisdiction and control as enterprises necessarily under Federal control by reason of the fact that they utilize waters useful for navigation over which the Federal Government has jurisdiction and with regard to which it has a duty to perform in maintaining the navigable character of the streams.

There are other reasons why it is unnecessary from the standpoint of the public interest to apply a measure of this kind to development on nonnavigable streams in the western section. If there is any portion of this country that needs Federal control, over and beyond the duty of carrying out the Federal obligation to maintain navigability, it is the part of the country to which this bill will not apply. That is the section east of the Mississippi River, where the law of riparian rights control, and where the public has no direct, positive, and definite control over the use of water. In all the western States the ownership of water in the people collectively is recognized, and water can not be diverted from its natural channel for any purpose whatever except under public control and by permission of public authority. Without regard to what the use may be, the water is at all times under that public control. In such a section it must be very apparent to any thinking man that there is no very considerable need for the establishment of Federal control over and above the absolute, unquestioned, unchallenged local control over the use of water.

But whether we like it or not, we are likely to come under the provisions of this bill, and, therefore, we are tremendously interested in its provisions, not only from the standpoint of our own section, but from the standpoint of the people of the country as a whole. With just one more reference to our western situation, I want to discuss the bill from the standpoint of the country generally.

During the discussion of this bill in the committee there were some members of the committee who, I understood, believed it important that the use of water for the purposes of irrigation should be considered in connection with the issuance of the permits and licenses provided for in the bill. Of course, it is apparent to anyone upon the slightest reflection that a bill drafted as this bill is, with a view of developing power and with a so-called recapture clause, can not properly apply to the diversion and the use of water for the irrigation of land to which the water so applied becomes appurtenant. A recapture clause in the case of an irrigation enterprise would involve the possible eventual taking over by the Federal Government of farms and homes, towns and municipalities, all of the developments of great communities dependent on irrigation.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Is the purpose of this bill to give exclusive control of these streams to the Federal Government and take away from the States the control that has generally been understood belong to the States?

Mr. MONDELL. The bill, thanks to the good judgment of the membership of the committee, expressly disavows any intent or purpose of taking over control of the waters from the States. But nevertheless and notwithstanding, the fact of Federal ownership of land is taken advantage of to assert a control and jurisdiction that could not be acquired in any other way, the theory being that the Government in granting the use of its lands may fix any sort of a condition relative to that use. It is not an entirely sound theory, in my opinion, but we have passed that phase of the discussion long since, and we have reached the point where we are discussing these things from the standpoint of what is likely to happen and occur, rather than what we would like to have happen.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In that connection I may say that while I understood the gentleman to state in reference to governmental control generally, I did have the impression, as far as the water-power sites are concerned, the Government intended to assume absolute control. Am I correct in that?

Mr. MONDELL. The Government has no control over the waters of nonnavigable streams, or the power developed from it, where the Government does not own land. In other words, the Government would have control of very little water-power development in the New England States except in the lower courses of the rivers, only partial control on the South Atlantic seaboard, very little in the gentleman's own country, and only partial control in my section of the country and elsewhere. In other words, the bill can only apply to those classes of cases where the waters utilized are navigable over which the Federal Government has control for the purposes of maintaining navigability. As to the nonnavigable streams, control arises, if at all, out of the fact that there may be lying along the banks of a stream, or somewhere in the locality, land useful in the development which belongs to Uncle Sam. Advantage is taken of such a situation to bring the development under Federal control.

In my section of the country water power entirely free from Federal control will be running side by side with water power under Federal control, and that will be true in every State in the Union having nonnavigable streams. In States that have no public land the development on nonnavigable streams will be free of Federal control under this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I see that I did not express myself clearly. The line of jurisdiction between Federal control and State control is, of course, very clear and easily stated, but where once the jurisdiction has attached and where once it is put in force, by and through this bill, then I understand that the jurisdiction will be absolute and the State will not be permitted to interfere in any way.

Mr. MONDELL. While we are on the question of control it might be worth while to consider just what the provisions of the bill are in that regard.

First, all projects licensed under the act are under control of the Federal commission, as follows:

The licensee shall "make all necessary renewals and replacements, shall maintain adequate depreciation reserves for such purposes * * * shall conform to such reasonable rules and regulations as the commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of life, health, and property."

As the local authorities also have jurisdiction over these matters there is in regard to them a divided jurisdiction, the boundaries of which must eventually become the subject of judicial decision.

Second, every project licensed under this act, except certain minor and municipal development, must "pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission." As the State has the power to tax the tangible property, this will, of course, be a burden on projects licensed in addition to the tax burden borne by competing concerns not under Federal license.

If the project operates wholly within a State, the bill provides that the licensee "shall abide by such reasonable regulation of the services to be rendered to customers or consumers of power, and of rates and charges of payment therefor, as may from time to time be prescribed by any duly constituted agency of the State in which the service is rendered or the rate charged."

Where the project and its service is not all in one State, the following provisions of section 20 apply:

SEC. 20. That when said power, or any part thereof, shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce the rates charged and the service rendered by any such licensee, or by any subsidiary corporation, the stock of which is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such licensee, or by any person, corporation, or association purchasing power from such licensee for sale and distribution or use in public service shall be reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and just to the consumer, and all unreasonable, discriminatory, and unjust rates or services are hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful; and whenever any of the States directly concerned has not provided a commission or other authority to enforce the requirements of this section within such State, or to regulate and control the amount and character of securities to be issued by any of such parties or such States are unable to agree through their properly constituted authorities on the services to be rendered or on the rates or charges of payment therefor, or on the amount or character of securities to be issued by any of said parties, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the commission, upon complaint of any person aggrieved, upon the request of any State concerned, or upon its own initiative to enforce the provisions of this section, to regulate and control so much of the services rendered, and of the rates and charges of payment therefor as constitute interstate or foreign commerce and to regulate the issuance of securities by the parties included within this section.

Mr. MAYS. Does the gentleman class Green River in his State as navigable?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think Green River can be properly classed as a navigable stream.

Mr. MAYS. According to the definition given by the gentleman from Tennessee, it certainly would be navigable if it will float a saw log and on which a boat can be operated.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, that is a very large question which we might discuss at great length and arrive at no definite conclusion. There are all sorts of opinions as to what constitutes a navigable stream. Those questions will have to be eventually decided.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Under the definition of this bill of navigable waters, has the gentleman ever considered the possibility of Federal construction including all of the streams in the United States, instead of only a part of them, all of them being put under Federal control?

Mr. MONDELL. Unless the Supreme Court shall render a decision different from those that have been rendered heretofore there will continue to be many streams in the Union that are not navigable.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Does this bill give a new definition to the term "navigable?"

Mr. MONDELL. It gives a definition of navigability.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. On page 26 of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not, I imagine, absolutely fix, decide, and determine the question. But even under that definition, fairly construed, I would say that none of the streams in my State are navigable, and none of the streams in the State of my friend from Nebraska are navigable. That, however, is a matter which will require some consideration when we reach it.

But, coming back to this question of irrigation, I find from a careful reading of the bill that the committee has endeavored to hew to the line and to exclude from the bill diversions of water used for irrigation purposes, although it has referred in one section to the development of power for irrigation purposes—that is, for the purpose of pumping for irrigation—and it is perhaps wise to do that. But there is one provision in section 10 of the bill on which I am not entirely clear, and which I want to discuss under the five-minute rule a little later. It provides that the commission in considering the issuance of licenses shall take into consideration the most comprehensive scheme of improvement and utilization for the purpose of navigation, of water-power development, irrigation, and other beneficial purposes.

What I fear is that that section will be construed by the commission as in some way giving them jurisdiction over the question of the diversion of water for irrigation. It was evidently not so intended. In my opinion, a fair interpretation would not justify such a view, and yet I fear that that is just the view the commission would take. What I fear is that having invited the attention of the commission to the question of the diversion of water for irrigation, we shall have the commission in a short time assuming to pass on applications which should be granted under the right-of-way act of 1891 for irrigation. Let us remember that the Secretary of the Interior, who is the officer who administers the act of 1891, is a member of this commission, and a Secretary of the Interior who was inclined to act on his authority as a member of the commission rather than as Secretary of the Interior might easily do what is done now every day in the year on the forest reserves, relative to irrigation rights of way.

The act of 1891 grants an easement in perpetuity for irrigation, and yet it is a notorious fact that those who enter forest reserves seeking a right of way for irrigation under that act are often met with delays until in many cases the applicant, thoroughly tired out and disgusted with those delays, accepts a suggestion that if he will take a revocable permit under the act of February 15, 1901, he can go to work at once on his development. I presented to the House some time ago a large number of cases where men clearly entitled to perpetual rights of way on forest reserves for irrigation purposes had been persuaded or compelled to accept revocable permits because of delay by the Forest Service in passing on their application. I fear the same thing will occur here under this bill, although clearly the committee does not intend and did not intend to give this commission any authority whatever over the diversion of water for irrigation. In my opinion it would be very much better to leave the word irrigation out of this bill in the two places where it occurs. This is a power bill. It is a bill that proposes what is known as a recapture, which everybody knows would be absolutely fatal to irrigation development.

I fear, when we invite these people to even inquire as to irrigation development in the granting of a power permit, in a short time we will find them asserting control over irrigation development upon the theory that the bill was intended to give them some such authority. Nothing that could happen would be more fatal to our development than that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say that I am delighted that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], a member of the committee, is here to hear the statements of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], because I thoroughly coincide with the judgment of the gentleman from Wyoming, and I feel it is very, very dangerous to have that word in here. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that after strenuous efforts I succeeded by a vote of 8 to 7 in getting section 27 put into this bill, which is the saving clause of our irrigation rights and is copied from the reclamation act, and I am in hopes this may obviate the danger the gentleman seems to feel we are threatened with.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad the provision the gentleman urged, and which I also urged in my hearing before the committee, is in the bill. It is highly important, and yet the gentleman knows that it is simply a declaration of fact; it is simply the recognition of a fact; but it is important to have it in the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is very important to have it in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Very important, as I suggested when I was before the committee; but here is the difficulty, that with all of the declarations in the world in the bill, if this water-power commission assumes authority to say whether or no a right of way shall be granted for irrigation, a declaration that they have no control over the water will be powerless to prevent them from doing just what the Forest Service has done in the cases I have referred to.

Whenever you invite these people, who should have to do with power development and that alone, to consider the question of diversion for irrigation, independent of power, you certainly invest them with something of control over that development. That would be harmful to irrigation development.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Right in that connection, suppose an application was made under this bill for power purposes and it was granted, the commission finding in the first instance that it was more valuable for hydroelectric-power development than for irrigation, but at the same time that irrigation could be used in connection with it, if the works were so constructed that the water could be made available for that purpose. In that circumstance does not the gentleman think that the irrigation feature should be taken care of instead of leaving it absolutely useless and idle?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman's statement were that of a situation likely to arise, then I would be inclined to agree with his view. This is a power bill, drawn with a view to the development of power, providing for a recapture, so called, at the end of a fixed period—a thing which everyone knows would be absolutely fatal to irrigation development. In that situation what are you going to do? You might go to the old irrigation right-of-way law and make provision in that law, if it were necessary to do so, under which no power development should be allowed until there had been an inquiry with regard to the uses of irrigation.

But the fact is that power development is not likely to so use and utilize water as to interfere with irrigation development, and the moment you invite a power commission to inquire into the questions of irrigation, they are likely to assume authority either to grant or to refuse to grant the diversion of water for irrigation. Under such construction of the statute the applicant for irrigation diversion might be seriously hampered by the decisions of this board——

Mr. RAKER. Not to interrupt the gentleman, but will he yield——

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). With an attempt to bring the project under their control with all of the fatal effects of the recapture clause.

Mr. RAKER. The recapture clause, as it relates to power, must be as necessarily effective on industries that have been built up by reason of the development as industries and farms built up under irrigation?

Mr. MONDELL. Irrigation could not exist under recapture so called. Nobody would irrigate farms if they thought that at the end of 50 years there was authority to take over the farm, the crops, and the community so built up. My friend from California will agree with me on that, and, therefore, irrigation should not be considered in connection with this water-power development measure. As the bill was originally drawn, it was confined to the use of water for purposes of power, and while the language I have referred to does not grant on fair construction any authority to this commission to attempt to control the use of water for irrigation, I am afraid they will endeavor to use their authority as I have explained the Forest Service use their authority on the forest reserves. I am of the opinion that few ordinary applicants for a right of way on a forest reserve for an irrigation ditch get their right of way under the act of 1891. They ordinarily get their right of way under the act of 1901, which is a revocable permit, unless they are wealthy and powerful and have their attorneys and contest the matter until they finally get their rights. The smaller and the average fellow gets tired of everlasting delays and accepts what he can get rather than that to which he is entitled.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having discussed those features, I want to discuss for a short time what is known as the recapture clause. There are people in this world who have the idea, or appear to have, that in some way you can inveigle capital into investing in the hope or on the pretense that it is going to be protected, and then by a carefully prepared legislative trap take over the result of capital's effort and investment without anybody having paid for it in the meantime. When the millennium comes and men shall work wholly for the glory of God and the good of their fellow men, without the thought of income or reward, you may be able to do that. In the meantime we are legislating to develop enterprise as it is carried on in the world. No man can live and feed and clothe himself and support his family unless he receives a fair reward for his labor and his efforts, which includes fair return on any funds he may have accumulated, saved up, and invested. No one should lay the flattering unction to his soul that you can fix up some scheme whereby you can deprive men of a fair reward and a reasonable income from their toil or their accumulations of toil in the form of cash and still get them to put forth effort. The man who indulges in any such vain imagining is bound to be disappointed.

It is argued that certain so-called recapture provisions should not be adopted because under them it would be difficult if not impossible to secure development. That is a highly important viewpoint. We want development, and we must have laws under which reasonably cautious men, men who do not want to invite financial loss, will feel justified in making investments. If we pass laws under which we can not secure development we legislate in vain. But there is another viewpoint which is even more important than that, and that is the viewpoint of the people to be served. You may secure some development of water power under a revocable permit, and we have in some cases. You might secure some development of water power under a provision that at the end of 50 years the public shall take the property over without paying a cent for it. You might secure some development under a provision of recapture under which there would be a strong probability of a considerable loss on the investment at the end of the period of the license. We might get some development under any of these plans, but anyone who imagines that any values secured by the public at the time of recapture would not have been paid for in the meantime by the users of power is certainly not using ordinary common sense and judgment. The power-using public would pay for all future losses by increased rates during the license period, and not only pay it all but probably pay it manyfold.

Assuming a recapture clause under which at the end of 50 years the plant becomes the property of the public without payment, what is the situation when you come to fix the rates and charges on that kind of property? Why, the first thing that would be done would be to fix an amortization charge. Is there anybody foolish enough to think that such a charge would not be added to the price which the public would pay for the service? Of course, if the enterprise was alongside of and in competition with an enterprise not so burdened the enterprise would not be developed, but assuming that it was not so situated, but it was so located that it could secure business, even at high rates, the public would pay for the final loss on investment in rates and charges. If we are to have any sort of provision of recapture less favorable than is provided in this bill, which I think a fair one, and which is intended to secure the investment against confiscation, then we should have one under which the public takes the property over without paying a dollar, so the investor will know exactly what to expect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if I may have 15 minutes additional——

Mr. ESCH. I yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Then we would know exactly where we were, and the investor would know where he stood. He would fix his rates and charges on knowledge of the fact that at the end of a 50-year period his investment would be wiped out, and he would recoup himself in the meantime and the user of power would pay for it.

Mr. RAKER. You have the same provision now contained in this bill in regard to the recapture clause, providing for amortization, by which, as a matter of fact, at the end of 50 years the plant will be paid for and can be taken over.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no provision in the bill authorizing a charge or rate for powder based on the amortization of the property with a view of returning in 50 years all the investment, together with interest. As a matter of fact, there is no provision in the bill that establishes a basis on which the State authorities shall fix the rates.

Mr. TILSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if, in case a recapture was made as easy as that, so that it would be amortized during the period, whatever it was—50 years or any other time—that would not simply mean that only the most promising of the water-power developments would be made?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true, and therefore no such plan should be adopted. I simply suggested it to illustrate my argument.

Mr. TILSON. All but the most promising would be left without any development at all, and the power that we want developed so as to save coal would not be developed at all.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true. But that is a plan under which everyone would know just where they stood. The man who developed the water power would know that he would have to have a rate high enough to return his principal and interest in the 50-year period. If in his opinion the development could prosper under those conditions he would undertake it, but otherwise he would not undertake it.

Now, how about the recapture plan which has been contained in the bills that have been before the House in the past, and which certain gentlemen are now contending for? Even the chairman of the committee, much to my surprise, has deserted the final judgment of the committee, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] joins with him. What is it they propose? The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] says, among other things, that the House has passed twice practically the sort of a recapture proposition he now approves of, and therefore, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, it should be considered as fixed and unalterable. The last man in this House who should make an argument of that kind is the gentleman from Oklahoma. His committee reported and passed through the House on two occasions an oil bill, as he said, with the indorsement of everybody worth while and the unanimous vote of the House. Those bills contained certain provisions of great and vital importance. On the third occasion on which the leasing bill was presented to the House by the gentleman from Oklahoma in lieu of the provision to which I have referred it contained a radically different provision, insisted upon by the gentleman from Oklahoma, a provision much less satisfactory to those interested and affected by it, and this provision was adopted.

It is true that on former occasions when water-power legislation was before the House a recapture provision, quite different from that now contained in the bill, was agreed to. I doubt, however, if that recapture provision was entirely satisfactory to anyone.

Let us examine for a moment that recapture provision which the gentleman from Oklahoma refers to in his minority report and insists shall be adopted in lieu of the provision now in the bill, which was submitted to the committee by, and has the approval of, the Cabinet members who will compose the Federal power commission. The recapture provision now insisted upon as a substitute for the provision in the bill sounds fair enough, as it proposes the taking over of the property at the end of 50 years on the basis of what is called "fair value." The taking over of the properties at their fair or reasonable value, if that is what was actually proposed, might not be particularly objectionable if it were not for the element of uncertainty involved, but this particular "fair value" scheme is subject to all sorts of exceptions and limitations. It is, in fact, anything but a real fair-value appraisal.

Under this particular scheme of so-called "fair value" no credit is to be given for increases of land values during the 50 years, notwithstanding the fact that in the majority of cases none of the lands would have been acquired from the Federal Government. No part of the so-called "fair value" is to be based on the business which has been built up during the period. There is to be no appraisal of "fair value" of franchises or contracts or good will. The so-called "fair value" is to be based only on the physical property, not including increased values of real estate.

In other words, it is proposed that the investor shall take all the chances and all of the risk, including the risk of having his property taken over at merely the bare value of the machinery and equipment.

Such a provision is not fair from the standpoint of the investor and is not in the public interest, because so uncertain that the public would have to pay increased rates and charges to compensate for the uncertainty and probable loss. An uncertain proposition like that invites the highest kind of high rates during the entire period of the license, on the theory that as there is likely to be a loss at the end of the period the investor has the right to recoup himself for that anticipated loss by charges high enough to cover it. Of course, if the conditions are such that the plant can not be operated because the business will not stand high rates, the enterprise will not be undertaken, or, if undertaken, will not be fully developed and may close down. We may be certain, however, that if a plant operates under that sort of a recapture clause the public will pay in rates and charges for all the uncertainties of the investment.

Take any ordinary rate-fixing board, with a provision such as the gentleman from Oklahoma contends for and such as I regret to say the chairman of the committee now seems to contend for. What would be the situation? Assume, as an illustration, that you gentlemen were members of a rate-fixing board, anxious to do your duty both by the people who furnished the power and those who pay for it. Suppose a power company were to appear before you with a view of having rates fixed.

They would present, first, a statement as to investments, depreciation, cost of operation, and the production of power. In addition to that, they would call your attention to this recapture clause, to its character and its probable effect on their particular enterprise. They would dwell on the uncertainty of the project incident to surrounding conditions and particularly on the uncertainty surrounding the investment at the end of the 50-year period. With such a recapture clause as is proposed, they could convince any reasonable person of the strong probability, amounting to almost a certainty, of a very considerable loss on the investment when the recapture clause became operative.

Any honest rate-fixing board would be compelled under the circumstances to establish rates high enough to cover these elements of uncertainty, these items of loss. If they did not, the courts would soon remind them that the investor has the right to a fair return on his investment, including a sum sufficient to reimburse him for property proposed to be taken over. As the investor would be entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt, the rates fixed or decreed would in all probability, in the majority of cases, prove to be more than ample to cover the final loss, and the public would suffer, as the public always does when some unwise, overzealous, or demagogic alleged friend sets on foot some illogical, unjust, or uneconomic scheme.

It is of vital importance that we shall have legislation which will insure the largest possible soundly economic development of water power. It ought to be entirely clear to the most superficial student or investigator of the subject that we can not hope for such development, except under conditions which will make low rates possible, and that low rates will only be possible if to the natural uncertainties and hazards of such enterprises we add no statutory artificial hazards and uncertainties.

Let us keep constantly in mind the fact that our aim and purpose should be to secure large development and to give the public the use of this development under the very best conditions and at the lowest possible rate. We can only hope to accomplish that by refraining from laying excessive burdens, creating artificial legislative handicaps, and avoiding impairment or confiscation of the investment.

No enterprise built under the provisions of the bill can successfully contend that it will, by reason of the provisions of the recapture clause, suffer any material loss in its capital investment at the end of the period, and therefore they can not ask for a penny in the rates and charges based on such a loss.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman assumes that the people who engage in the development of these water powers do so in order to make money?

Mr. MONDELL. That has been my assumption. I grant you from the viewpoint of some gentlemen that seems to be a violent one.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to a statement——

Mr. MONDELL. And I want to say to the gentleman right there, that no one more than I insists that there shall be at all times public control, unquestioned public control, over the rates and charges, so that there shall not be more than a reasonable income.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a statement made by the chairman of this committee the other day in response to a question that I asked of him, because I myself had been laboring under the impression that probably gentlemen who invested their money in water-power development had some notion that they would make some money from the transaction. He said:

> Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Government is not hunting up anybody to give them permits to make money for themselves.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I think the chairman of the committee must have made that statement without thinking for the moment just how it sounded. And that brings me to another idea on which part of the theory in regard to flytrap recapture clauses is evidently based.

Some gentlemen seem to have in their minds some such theory as this, that in sundry and divers places throughout the country there are golden opportunities lying around loose, like coined doubloons, ready for some one to pick them up, and that the Federal Government actually has great, instantly valuable, and coinable resources of vast wealth which it is proposing to hand out under this bill. If I held any such view as that I would not be for such legislation as this at all. The Federal Government has no right to hand out to any individual immediately available resources of very great value. If the Federal Government has such it should utilize them in the interest of all the people. There may be a few cases where the Federal Government has itself made a development which renders a water power instantly or readily available. In such cases there should be a real charge based on the Government's investment.

In the majority of cases water-power projects are questionable in the extreme. They require the most careful examination, and if found feasible the most intelligent and painstaking development and management. They are subject to all sorts of contingencies and uncertainties, and we can not hope to secure their development unless we do the fair thing by the investor. The investor takes all the chances; let us not forget that. We are not proposing to relieve the investor from any of the perils that naturally attach to his enterprise; let us not, however, create artificial dangers and invite artificial uncertainties. If we do, we not only retard or prevent development but we afford excuses or reasons for the laying of added burdens on the people.

I insist on the strictest and most continuous public control of every service and every rate. But that being done, let us not imagine that we can lay burdens in taxes and charges and final confiscation that the people will not pay. They will pay them, and they will pay them multiplied times over, as the years go by, in the rates and charges for the use of these properties.

The interest of the public in all water-power development is this: The most complete development, the largest possible use, and the lowest possible rate. We will secure all these if we make the conditions clear and definite and lay the fewest possible burdensome obligations. Let us control, not burden these enterprises, to the end that we may secure the largest development, and that the people shall have the widest and best use at the lowest possible rate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, the development and utilization of the latent water power of the country is the most important question before the American people. Both from a commercial and economic standpoint it appeals equally to all, and it was the one subject, besides regular war legislation, of such importance as to receive special mention in President Wilson's first message to the Sixty-fifth Congress. It is especially befitting that this legislation should be considered at this time when preservation and conservation are uppermost in the minds of our people, for it is the only known natural resource that is not lessened or diminished by continued use, and its fullest conservation can only be accomplished by its complete utilization. The development of water power goes hand in hand with progress and prosperity, brings comfort and profit to humanity without distruction, without deterioration, and without loss. As a people develop and advance in civilization, so also are their water powers made most use of. In France and Germany water power and water transportation play an important part in their national life, while in the Western Hemisphere, with our superabundant supply of nature's resources, we have never given them the attention their importance demands, and only in New England and some of the Eastern States has any substantial part of the available water power been used.

Power, and cheap power, is the cornerstone of a nation's industrial progress, and the internal development of any country must precede its external commerce, and this power, like "acres of diamonds," is to-day lying dormant in the dooryard of the American people, and we have not awakened to our opportunity, as is shown by the fact that we have only developed about 8 or 10 per cent of the 60,000,000 horsepower available in this country. The last two decades have seen the greatest advances and development during our Nation's history along every line except water power. Just stop for a moment and consider what has been done in the iron and steel industry, railroads, paper and pulp, telegraph and telephone, manufacturing of every kind, and, above all, in the knowledge and use of electricity, yet the very source of this electrical energy, water power and hydroelectric development, has been at a practical standstill, except in private domain where Federal control could not interfere.

It was with full knowledge of present conditions that led the President to say:

> It is imperatively necessary that the consideration of the full use of the water power of the country and also the consideration of the systematic and yet economical development of such of the natural resources of the country as are still under the control of the Federal Government should be immediately resumed and affirmatively and constructively dealt with at the earliest possible moment. The pressing need of such legislation is daily becoming more obvious.

It is a fact universally conceded and not contradicted that the sole reason why but 10 per cent of the water powers of the United States have thus far been developed is because capital for development purposes can not be obtained under the unfair, unbusinesslike, and restrictive terms of the Federal laws now in force.

PRESENT LAW.

Prior to 1890, when Congress passed the first general law controlling structures in navigable streams, the individual States exercised their sovereignty over navigable rivers, authorized the construction of dams and bridges, and defined the rights of riparian owners in their waters without any interference on the part of the Federal Government. While the act of 1890 was quite general in its effect, the act of 1899 assumed complete control over all navigable streams and actually forbade the construction of any piers, dams, or structures of any name or nature without the special consent of Congress.

An act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable rivers" was passed in 1906, which required the consent of Congress by special act for any dam construction and provided the conditions upon which any construction or development could be made.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the act of 1899 that the gentleman referred to?

Mr. SNELL. Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, I should have said.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is that?

Mr. SNELL. That was the first general law controlling structures in navigable streams passed by the Federal Government. Before this individual States exercised control over navigable streams; but there was no specific law really contained in the act. But I am now speaking of the act of 1906, which was superseded by the act of 1910, which is the present law. This act, which was intended to amend former acts, really repealed them all and completely covered the question of power development. This act not only requires the consent of Congress by special act for each individual development on navigable streams and on public domain but, as far as possible, describes the conditions under which all construction must be made. These conditions are so entirely impracticable and uncertain that all water-power development under Federal control has practically ceased.

First. This act requires the person making the development to comply with or construct according to plans approved by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers and authorizes those officers to impose such terms and conditions as they deem necessary to protect present and future needs of navigation. That is, the Federal Government may come along after you have completed your development and require you to construct, maintain, and operate without expense to the Government any necessary dams, appurtenances, works, locks, sluices, or other structure or structures which Congress, the Secretary of War, or Chief of Engineers may at any time consider necessary or in the interest of navigation. Of course, the first part of this reservation is proper and correct, that they should make all due allowances and reservations for navigation; but when you add on the fact that the owner of the development must make any additional expenditures that some officer might in the future deem necessary, and to operate it for all time without expense to the Government, regardless of cost, regardless of the proportionate expense of this added construction to the original cost or size of the development, you have placed restrictions in the law that no sane man or man of experience will go up against. I can readily conceive of a small development where the Government might come along later and call for an expenditure of an amount in building locks, sluices, and so forth, that would even be in excess of the original cost.

Second. The Secretary of War is not only authorized to fix and collect various charges for permits granted, but the rights acquired under the act may be annulled at any time by the company's failing to comply with some minor provisions of the act, and the company obliged to actually remove all its dams and improvements of every name and nature at its own expense without any recourse on the part of the courts of the land; and, also, Congress can repeal the act at any time without any protection on the part of the developing company for property taken or destroyed.

Third. The time limit of 50 years in itself is all right, but there is absolutely no provision for renewal or pay for the property taken over by the Government at that time, or guaranty of protection for any business that may be depending on it for power.

Instead of "An act to regulate power development," it should have been called "An act to prohibit power development." As proof of this statement I have only to call your attention to the fact that with but two small exceptions no power developments and river improvements have been made by private capital upon navigable streams since 1912, and developments are prevented and held back aggregating over 2,000,000 horsepower and which would open over 1,000 miles of additional inland waterways to navigation, through investment of private capital, and without taxation or appropriation of public moneys.

The would-be conservationist has, in my judgment, been one of the greatest drawbacks to progressive water-power legislation we have in the whole country. Under this guise they have flooded the people with all kinds of propaganda intended to deceive and mislead. Not one of them ever developed a water power or has had a particle of actual experience in this work. They simply advance fancied theories on the basis of State or Government ownership, and want all the benefits to accrue to the State, all the revenues; in fact, absolute control even if built by private capital. And this bombastic talk under caption of conservation influenced the people for some time, but it is fast losing its grip, and the thinking, conservative people of this country well know that the only way to stop this waste, to conserve and use this power that is to-day running idle to the sea, is by passing such a law that will not only protect the public but attract private capital. And the water powers of this country will never be successfully and economically developed except by private enterprise and private capital.

NOT ALL PROFIT.

As a result of this false propaganda in regard to profits and water-power trusts, and so forth, a great many people have a mistaken idea about the amount of easy money in water-power development. The idea is prevalent that all you have to do is to find a water power somewhere and the world is yours. Let me disabuse your mind of that fact, for, on the other hand, it is one of the most uncertain and hazardous undertakings of any line of business I know of, not excepting mining or drilling for oil and gas. Furthermore, it takes such a long time to get any returns on your money. Any medium-sized power development will take two to four years to develop, even if you have good luck, and then it may take almost any length of time, from 1 to 10 years, to get full market for your power. And there is no kind of machinery that costs more or wears out and becomes obsolete faster than water wheels and general hydroelectric machinery; therefore wear and tear and replacement expenses are almost beyond comprehension. The average water power is away from the centers of population, in rough and undeveloped sections, and the man who has the courage and nerve to tackle the problem generally has to build roads to it, clear ground, build houses, and a dozen other things that cost an immense amount of money, which are all done away with later, and the casual observer who comes along after the plant is completed and looks it over has very little conception of the work that has been done, the obstacles that have been overcome, or the enormous amount of money that has been spent and is covered up with apparently nothing to show for it.

It is on account of this uncertainty, the hazardous character of the whole work, that makes it absolutely imperative if you want to attract capital and men of experience, energy, and ability to this kind of work—and you will need them all before you finish a good-sized hydroelectric development—to put up a proposition that is something more than a mere interest-bearing proposition, for they can get that without taking all these long chances. Still we hear men arguing on this floor that if the developer gets interest on a successful proposition, and so forth, he should be satisfied. I tell you, gentlemen, going out into the wilds and developing any kind of a proposition is no simple-interest game. You can be one of these "swivel-chair officers" we hear so much about nowadays, and get simple interest; but the man who takes all the chances, and goes out and actually produces something, he does not take it away from anyone; he produces something that makes the world richer; produces something that benefits the present generation and all posterity. That man is honestly entitled to more than a bond and mortgage interest return on his investment, and some people would want him limited to that. He is entitled to a liberal return, for the simple reason that he has been a lifter instead of a leaner in the community in which he lives. The hazards of this kind of work are so many that the paper profit before you begin must be very attractive or you will never get anyone to undertake this work. Let me enumerate some of these unforseen things that happen in water-power development and you will see that it is not all sunshine. And I might say right here I am speaking from actual experience.

You employ the best and most experienced engineer you can find. He tells you, after months of figuring, surveying, sounding, and estimating, that your proposition will cost so-and-so and will take so long to put in operation. You start on that basis. You have made arrangements for so much money, so long a time to do the work, and on this basis you can make a good profit on the sale of your power. The first proposition you are up against is that low water does not come this year until a month later than the usual year, so you can not get your cofferdams in as you expected. When you do get this cofferdam in, the foundation rock is not as firm as expected and you must get additional machinery and take out a great deal more than anyone could possibly anticipate from the original soundings. The rains come weeks earlier this fall than ever before and high water is on you before you are ready and everything is drowned out and no human effort can help it.

Elements have been against that kind of work all the year, and it becomes freezing weather or such high water that you can not do to advantage that kind of work and must wait—or practically do so—until another season. Thus one year is gone and your work is not well under way, although you have spent money enough to get nearly all your foundation in. Next year labor is 20 per cent higher than it was ever known before, or you figured in the estimates, and it is impossible to get efficient labor at any price. Thus you go on; one thing after another happens, until you find it has taken 12 to 24 months longer than you expected and cost anywhere from 50 to 100 per cent more than you figured to do the work. Then, when you are ready for business, the public-service commission comes along and values the property, insists on the highest-grade service, and regulates the rates in such a way that it is difficult to figure a fair interest return on the investment.

This is the history of all water-power development—costs much more than you expect and takes longer to do the work. So there must be more than ordinary inducement on the start or men will never undertake it. The three largest water-power developments in my State in the last 20 years have all failed from one to three times before they got on a firm business basis. The largest one was reorganized by the third set of men before it was a paying proposition. One, I think, is still in the hands of a receiver; and yet the casual observer or uninformed will tell you about these water powers and how much they are making when he does not know how many thousands of dollars have been sunk there and the years it took to put them on a paying basis.

Therefore, gentlemen, on account of this uncertainty, the hazardous nature of it all, if you want your water powers developed you must pass a law liberal enough in every way to attract men of experience and capital or these powers will continue to lie dormant, the same as they have in the past.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement, and I know he has a very intimate knowledge of this problem. I wanted to ask him if, under the provisions of this bill, water-power development in his own State would be materially stimulated or encouraged? How much opportunity is there in the gentleman's State for the further development of water power?

Mr. SNELL. As far as our own State is concerned, outside of a few special places like the St. Lawrence River, the water power is fairly well developed; and, as I understand the bill or as I hope the bill will be when entirely completed, the nonnavigable streams, or what we call in our State nonnavigable-in-fact streams, will not come under the provisions of the bill. There is a big power on the St. Lawrence River that must have some special legislation before it can ever be developed; but that, of course, being a boundary stream, I do not understand that it comes under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. One further question. Has the State of New York assisted private capital in the development of water power?

Mr. SNELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. WALSH. So that the great power plants in the gentleman's State have been established and maintained through private capital?

Mr. SNELL. Entirely through private capital.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for one question?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Referring to the streams that the gentleman has spoken of, are they inside the State entirely?

Mr. SNELL. Absolutely.

Mr. TILSON. And are under the control of the State, and would not come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. SNELL. I do not consider they will come under the provisions of this bill. My purpose was to show that all development has taken place on streams not affected by Federal laws.

Mr. TILSON. My own recollection agrees with that of the gentleman, that all water-power development has practically stopped since the original law of 1910 was passed, so far as United States waters are concerned, or waters which the United States controls.

Mr. SNELL. Nothing has been developed since the enactment of the present law, with two small exceptions.

Mr. TILSON. And the development has taken place largely within the States without being hampered by the law of 1910?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; almost entirely so.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. SINNOTT. Speaking of nonnavigable streams, what is the outlet of those streams that the gentleman referred to? What do they flow into?

Mr. SNELL. I want to take up that question later. There may be some discussion about that point. They flow into navigable streams.

Mr. SINNOTT. Then, according to the theory of some, Congress would have jurisdiction over those nonnavigable feeders on the theory that he who destroys the foundation of my house takes the prop by which it is sustained. On that theory Congress would have jurisdiction over the nonnavigable streams for the purpose of protecting navigation on the larger streams into which those smaller streams flow, and thereby your nonnavigable streams would come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SNELL. I think they would under that construction.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to say that I am very glad that the gentleman feels that his streams will not be included; but as a member of this committee, I think the policy contemplated is to include them all; and when you attempt, as I hope you will do, to have some express provision placed in the bill regarding them, you will find a great deal of opposition to anything that specifically limits or excludes them.

Mr. SNELL. I am going to take up that subject later in my remarks.

The idea that any law that Congress may enact would be eagerly accepted by would-be water developers and by investors has thus been proved to be a delusion. To be effective, to cure the present stagnation, and to bring about the development of our now wasting water powers, the present faulty laws must be repealed and replaced by legislation based upon business principles. As I have already tried to show, and shall endeavor to show later on, the water-power business, under the supervision and control of the public authorities as to rates and service, is conducted upon a close margin of profit; and if development capital is to be secured the investor in water-power securities must know in advance that in so far as the requirements of Federal laws are concerned they will be such as will protect and not imperil his investment.

Prudent men could not give their time nor invest their money under the impractical conditions of our present Federal laws, and, prevented by the laws and policy of their own country from engaging in developing the water powers of the United States, our citizens have found in other lands the welcome for their enterprise and capital denied them at home. Thus over 300,000 horsepower has been developed in Canada, Norway, Sweden, and France by Americans with American capital, and the establishment of great industrial plants involving the expenditure of millions of dollars and the employment of thousands of men has been lost forever to the United States. I have a concrete example of this in my home county. A company owned a power site on the St. Lawrence River, but on account of the restrictive laws of this country and their inability to get a proper charter, they went 75 miles down the river into Canadian territory and purchased a new site, put in a development, used the same water, met all navigation restrictions and regulations, developed 150,000 horsepower by hydroelectric energy, and are to-day bringing over one-half of that power over 85 miles of wire back into the United States and manufacturing equipment for the United States Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield me about 10 minutes more?

Mr. ESCH. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Thus millions of American money have been spent in Canada, labor employed there, and taxes paid there that should be in the United States. But that is not the whole story. If Canada needs this power she may take it at any time and shut off a supply that is of vital importance to this Government at this time. With proper legislation on our statute books this important water-power development would to-day be under the American flag at the complete command of the Federal Government.

Let us be careful, therefore, that in the preparation and the enactment of the new legislation now under our consideration we do not perpetuate instead of cure the present unfortunate situation. If we adopt a narrow, cheese-paring policy and load down development and operation with too many restrictions, our water powers will continue to waste while those of other countries are being utilized.

A good deal has been said regarding Congress protecting the interests of the people in this matter. It is in the interest of the people, and tremendously in their interest and for their benefit, that Congress should enact legislation of a character which will encourage and not prevent water-power development. The importance and necessity that coal and oil should be conserved through utilization of the hydroelectric energy now wasting in our falling waters is so great that Congress could well afford to authorize the payment of a substantial bonus for hydroelectric development if it could be secured in no other way.

It is estimated that under stress of war conditions and necessities brought about through lack of coal and shortage of electrical energy for production of munitions, that during the period since the war began the development of over 2,000,000 water horsepower has been undertaken in European countries. It may be truthfully said that it will take from two to three years to complete water-power developments on a large scale, and that the war will probably be over before the power would be ready for utilization. But the war may last for three years or more, and the development of our water powers and the utilization of the vast amount of energy contained therein, which would largely replace man power, might be a mighty factor in deciding the conflict in our favor. I consider, therefore, that water-power legislation is essentially war legislation, and that not an unnecessary day should be lost in its enactment. And in the time of peace to come, when the nations will grapple as never before for world supremacy in trade and commerce, no factor will be so important, so necessary, to industrial expansion and to the growth of our foreign commerce as cheap electrical power in unlimited quantities.

The country needs and demands that our water powers be developed. The newspapers all over the land are voicing this demand. All but 6 of the 1,339 business organizations which constitute the membership of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and having a membership of over 500,000 business men, have voted recommending "that Federal legislation encouraging the development of water powers should at once be enacted."

The hour has struck. The country calls on Congress to promptly enact water-power legislation of a nature that will insure development.

I have carefully studied the bill reported by the Water Power Committee. It fully protects every public interest. Its terms and penalties are severe. I wish that its terms were more encouraging to the investor, but, with the three changes indicated below, I believe that it will put the proposed Federal power commission in a position to issue permits under which money might be obtained for development purposes.

FIRST CHANGE.

Section 3, top page 26, defines "navigable waters" as "all streams or parts of streams and other bodies of water or parts thereof, over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States."

From this definition there is no doubt in my mind but that the bill goes further in its control than the committee intended, as I do not believe they intended to bring small feeders to navigable streams under the provisions of this bill or to require anyone who desires to develop power on privately owned land, on these small feeders, nonnavigable in fact, to apply to a Federal commission for a permit. And I believe the language of the Shields bill defining navigable streams, as follows, to be much better:

That the term "navigable waters" as used in this act and as applied to streams shall be construed to include only such streams or parts of streams as are in their ordinary natural condition used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce, or which through improvement heretofore or hereafter made have been or shall become usable in such commerce. As to all other streams or parts of streams over which Congress has jurisdiction, under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, permission is hereby given to construct dams therein, subject, however, to removal or reconstruction, without expense to the United States unless utilized by the United States, whenever the United States enters upon the improvement thereof for the purpose of making the same usable for interstate or foreign transportation: Provided, That any person who proposes to construct a dam in any such last-mentioned stream or part of stream may make application to the Secretary of War, and thereupon may receive a permit under the conditions with all the rights and privileges herein provided for streams or parts of streams used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce in their ordinary, natural, or improved condition. Nothing in this section shall be construed to grant any right to occupy or use any public land.

This definition of navigable streams, in my judgment, could be used to better advantage than that carried in the bill and in no way injure the intent or purpose of the bill, and at the proper time I intend to offer such an amendment, which I trust will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman certainly does not consider this bill in the sense of requiring anybody to apply for a license. There is nothing in the bill that requires anybody to apply for a license.

Mr. SNELL. I certainly do consider that they can not go on and develop on navigable streams and feel secure in their work unless they apply for and act under license.

Mr. ANDERSON. They simply take their chances if they do not.

Mr. SNELL. They certainly will not take chances; so if they do develop they will necessarily come in under this law if passed, and I trust it will.

Mr. ANDERSON. If they develop power on a small stream they take their chances that Congress may at some time make a requirement with respect to small streams. This bill does not do that at all.

Mr. SNELL. I trust that is so, but I say that the language of the Shields bill as to navigable streams should be used in this bill, instead of the language that is used at the present time, for the definition of navigable streams in the Shields bill, in my judgment, covers all that was intended.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman from Minnesota said they run their chances at the present time. At the present time they are not running any chances. They go on a small stream and secure their rights, and if the Government hereafter should undertake to interfere with those rights the Government would have to compensate them for any loss.

CHANGE TWO.

Mr. SNELL. The second change that I would like in the bill is in section 6.

Section 6 provides that licenses shall be issued for a period not exceeding 50 years.

Sections 14 and 15 give the United States the option to do one of three things upon the expiration of the license:

First. Upon two years' notice upon or after the expiration of the license to purchase the property for itself;

Second. To issue a new license to the original licensee; or Third. To issue a new license to a new licensee who, before taking possession of the property, shall purchase it on the terms of the Government option.

But the bill does not cover the time which may elapse between the expiration of the original license and the time when the Government takes action upon one of the three things before mentioned. If this hiatus is not remedied it will prevent development, for it would leave the licensee at the end of his license without any right whatever and in the position of a trespasser until such time as the Government or a new licensee purchases his property or he is granted a new license.

In section 6, line 25, after the word "years," should be inserted an amendment providing that "after the termination of such period the licensee, upon application for a new license, shall continue in undisturbed possession and use under the conditions prescribed in the license until a new license is issued, as provided in section 15 hereof, or until the properties are taken over and compensation is made as provided in section 14 hereof."

CHANGE THREE.

Section 15 provides that if the United States does not at the expiration of the original license purchase the property, or if the property is not purchased by a new licensee, that the commission is authorized to issue a new license to the original licensee "upon such terms and conditions as may be authorized or required under the then existing laws and regulations."

Thus the licensee would be obliged, if the property is not purchased from him, to accept a license in accordance with the then existing laws, but which might not be workable and which might imperil his investment and under which he might not be able to earn a fair return upon his investment.

In other words, he might be forced to accept a new license of a character which, could he have foreseen its terms, would have prevented him from making his original investment. I doubt very much whether it will be possible to induce the investment of capital in the development of water powers unless the bill gives assurance that if the original licensee is obliged to continue the operation of the property under a new license after the original license expires that the new license shall be of a nature which will not imperil his investment nor prevent the earning of a reasonable return thereon. I therefore suggest that there be inserted in section 15, page 21, line 1, after the word "regulations," the words "but not for a period of less than 20 years and not such as will impair the net investment nor the right to earn a reasonable return thereon." I consider that this will be only fair to the investor. Capital will not invest in a business where the earnings are close in the face of a condition which might imperil its safety and earning capacity.

I would like these few changes incorporated in the bill, but if the committee does not agree with me I shall support and vote for it. I believe it is the best piece of legislation on this subject ever presented to this House for consideration. It is the result of honest effort on the part of the committee to meet the demands of the country for legislation that will encourage instead of prohibit future development, and I hope it will pass by unanimous vote and soon become the law of the land. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, the object of the pending bill, as I understand it, is to secure the development of the water powers of the country. Much has been said and much more could be said of the importance of such development, but it is unnecessary to dwell upon that at length, because substantially every Member of this House understands it. We all know that the only way to conserve water power is to use it; that water power will in many cases take the place of exhaustible fuel resources; that industries which can not exist without cheap power, and which therefore are at present practically nonexistent in this country, will come into being with water-power development; that in connection with water-power development vast irrigation enterprises are possible, greatly increasing the agricultural resources of the country; that water-power development will result in the production of more and cheaper fertilizer products, again to the great benefit of agriculture; that with it new industrial centers will be established, railroad transportation will be improved and perhaps cheapened. In short, we all know that for years the country has been permitting one of its greatest resources to go to waste for the lack of the very legislation we are now attempting to secure.

The question presented, therefore, is not the need of water-power development, but rather the method of development. Evidently there are only two ways: Either the Government must develop the water powers or they must be developed by private capital. I do not favor water-power development by the Government, because I think the Government has sufficient burdens already, but I am willing to concede that if the country were ready for it, and Congress and the Executive were ready to embark upon that policy, water-power development might be secured in that way. The fact is the country is not ready for it, and, if I am able to judge of the temper of Congress, Congress is not ready for it. If Government development of water power were to be depended on to secure the advantages all concede would flow from such development, there would be a very long delay before it could be accomplished, if it ever could be accomplished. The result is that for practical purposes it is necessary to assume that such development can only be secured now by the use of private capital. That is the tenor of the Executive recommendation, partly in response to which we are acting, and it is the theory, and properly so, of the pending bill. Under these circumstances it is natural and proper that some consideration at least should be given to the conditions of investment under which private capital can be secured for these enterprises, or in fact for any enterprise.

Since the war began we have had an important object lesson relating to the source from which the money, which is required in large quantities, must necessarily come, namely, from the savings of the people of the country. These savings, though comparatively small in individual cases, in the aggregate amount up to figures which are enormous. They become available at the present time for war uses through the investment of the people in liberty loans and savings certificates. In ordinary times they become available for the construction of railroads, public-utility enterprises, and great works of all kinds through their investment in securities offered by reliable concerns. There is in normal times a great competitive investment market, where through various agencies the savings of the people are placed to secure profitable and safe investment. Money to develop the water-power enterprises of the country must necessarily be secured in this competitive market. Consequently if we are to secure water-power development by means of private capital it is necessary to make the terms and conditions under which the investment is to be made such that it will afford absolute security to the investor and will be sufficiently attractive so that it can compete in the investment market with other desirable investments offered.

This does not mean that the public interest need in any way or at any time be sacrificed or should be sacrificed. On the contrary, the complete protection of the public interest should be the first consideration. To my way of thinking, the development of the water-power resources of the country is in itself a tremendous public interest. We can do nothing to safeguard the interests of the public by imposing water-power terms and conditions so onerous as to defeat development. The next matter of great public interest is that after water-power development is secured there shall be public regulation of the rates and charges for service, so that the development, when it takes place, shall benefit the consumers of power. This, I feel, has been amply provided for in the pending bill. A third matter of public interest is that the way may be left open so that at some time if the Government desires to take over and operate these properties it may do so. This also has been amply provided for in the pending bill, but the method of doing so has been attacked in the minority report, and I wish to dwell upon this matter for a moment.

It has been said that the so-called "recapture" terms in the pending bill are so onerous and cumbersome that they practically deny any right of recapture which they purport to afford. I deny that this is true. The term "net investment" is not a cumbersome term nor one not easily understood. The meaning is that if the Government takes over the property of the water-power licensee, thus compelling him to hand over the business and retire from the field, there shall be returned to him the amount of money which he has legitimately invested in the enterprise and no more. It has been said that by this clause the Government guarantees the water-power licensee against loss in the enterprise. Of course, it does nothing of the kind. If the water-power enterprise is unsuccessful the licensee has no power to compel the Government to take over the property, and he must bear his losses as best he can. If, on the other hand, the enterprise is successful, he must at the end of 50 years, if the Government desires it, take back his invested money without any profit whatever thereon, except such as he may have earned from year to year, and retire from the business. He not only is not guaranteed against loss, but he is, on the contrary, prohibited from receiving more than ordinarily reasonable annual profits. In addition thereto the licensee is compelled to make necessary renewals and replacements to take care of depreciation and deterioration, so that upon recapture the Government may have a sound plant. There are some of us who believe that he should be far more liberally dealt with; that when a man has taken the risk and spent the time, energy, daring, and determination necessary to develop one of these hazardous enterprises, he should, if called upon to relinquish it, be given some compensation for the work that he has done other than ordinary annual profits. However this may be, it is perfectly obvious that no one will invest in water-power enterprises unless he is at least assured that he shall not have his property taken away from him without return of the capital invested. This is all the so-called "recapture clause" of the bill provides for.

This legislation means a great deal to my State and to the section of the country which I in part represent. The committee which has reported this legislation has, I believe, given ample and thorough consideration to the measure. While it is not in all respects as liberal as I wish it were, and while I do not believe that it will secure development to the extent I wish development might be secured, I am convinced that it will secure some development almost immediately, and I trust that it will have the approval of this House substantially in the form reported by the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield some time?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] 10 minutes.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, when properly amended and passed, will be at once a most important piece of war legislation and a powerful addition to that legislation which tends to fortify our Nation for the reconstruction period to follow after the war. The first district of Connecticut, which I have the honor to represent, is vitally interested in it, for we have on the Connecticut River, about 12 miles above Hartford, at what is known as the Enfield Rapids, 40,000 horsepower running to waste every day, although it is situated in the heart of a manufacturing district where more than 100,000 horsepower are being manufactured daily out of coal at a high cost to manufacturers, to say nothing of the difficulties of securing an adequate coal supply at present.

If this bill had been passed before the war broke out we would have been spared the sacrifice of last winter, when coal was sent to the homes of our citizens and to our ships at the expense of our manufacturing establishments, when there should have been enough to go around. Oil would have been saved. The power that might have been available by such a bill as the one under consideration could have been used for factories, while the Fuel Administration could have diverted its supplies to homes and to ships.

Power can be supplied to Connecticut concerns within a reasonable radius of the Enfield Rapids at about half the cost of producing steam power. Connecticut has already granted authority for the development of this power, the State of Connecticut owning the bed of the river. The State more than 10 years ago, through its general assembly, went on record as favoring a special act permitting the damming of the river at Windsor Locks. The $5,000,000 necessary for financing this project, I am informed, is ready and waiting. I am told that about 70 Connecticut and Massachusetts men have been organized into a company anxious to see this development made, and prepared to invest their money in it. The men include manufacturers, who want the power in their large industries; transportation men, who wish to see the navigable possibilities of the river developed; and men otherwise interested in the growth of the State.

There is no navigation on the Connecticut River above Hartford on account of the Enfield Rapids. The Government has declined to improve the river owing to the expense of placing a dam across it in order to permit boats to surmount the rapids. It has, however, recommended that certain improvements be authorized, provided private capital build a dam at Windsor Locks.

The passage of this act will practically clear the way for wonderful development.

Added to the long story of the water-power controversy is the feature, now palpable to all, that the enactment of the measure will help immeasurably in winning the war. Then, too, there are the other reasons not so important, but in themselves compelling. The purpose is to serve the public interest; to safeguard the people against any overcharge for power; to prevent illegal combinations in restraint of trade and at the same time to permit and encourage the investment of capital in the development of water-power projects in order that the vast amount of hydroelectric power now being wasted in this country can be immediately utilized. From every part of the country there is an insistent demand for electric power. This call comes from the city and from the country, from factory and from farm, from the manufacturing centers of the East, from the arid lands of the West, and from the new industrial cities of the South. More and cheaper electric power is demanded for lighting our houses and streets, for cooking our food, for use in our factories, for moving our railroads now operated by steam, and for street railways, and for interurban lines; for pumping water for irrigation and to drain the overabundantly watered lands of the South.

Cheap electric power is demanded that this country may be on an industrial footing equal to that of the nations of Europe, where, it must be admitted, the development of the new electric chemical industries is far in advance of this country. The present laws have caused what is practically a deadlock between capital and the Government in the development of water powers upon all rivers under the control of the United States. Grants permitted under the terms of the present laws are not such as to encourage the investment of capital in water-power projects. The result is a complete stagnation of water-power developments. The few plants that have been constructed have either been exceptionally favored in their situation or have become bankrupt.

In the attempt to protect the interests of the public preventive measures have been passed, so that the public has been deprived of the great benefits to be secured from the full and adequate development of the water powers of this country. What is needed to-day is a constructive program rather than a destructive one, legislation which will permit and encourage the development of navigation and hydroelectric plants to the utmost, yet at the same time safeguard the people against extortion by high prices for power and combinations to prevent the full development and use of these powers. It is just as important to secure for the public the benefits to be derived from the development of these waterways as it is to protect them against high prices and illegal combinations.

All legislation should be in the public interest, but it is not in the public interest to pass laws which prevent utilization of the greatest natural resources of this country.

It is now time to pass constructive legislation which will enable the development of these water powers on terms fair to the public and to private capital.

It is a mistaken policy to prevent the present development of water powers in the belief that in the future they will be more valuable than now and a large source of income to the United States Government, to be raised through the taxation of these water powers. All taxation must be uniform. Every tax laid on water powers must be paid by the consumers of the power and means a higher price for power to those consumers. The correct policy is to encourage the development of our water powers and to protect the consumers by provisions which will prevent extortionate charges for water power, or a too high rate of return, or more than a reasonable return to capital, a policy which will result in both protecting capital against confiscations and the consumer against extortionate rates.

In addition to increasing power, the bill will add to navigation on the Connecticut River. The present dam has been built since 1831. The plan is now to relocate the dam at the foot of the rapids instead of at their head, and, through locks and canals, to provide a continuous journey from Hartford to Springfield and Holyoke.

No one, I am sure, feels that our waterways should be left to the exploitation of private interests, but a program fair to all concerned should be inaugurated. Perhaps in a generation or two the Government will own all water powers, but in the meantime they should be developed along lines laid down by the Government.

The development of the water power at Windsor Locks is a matter which concerns all of the towns situated near that place. This is a manufacturing as well as an agricultural part of the State of Connecticut. The communities which will be directly interested and their population in 1910 follow:

Hartford	98,915
New Britain	43,916
East Hartford	8,138
Windsor	4,178
South Windsor	2,251
East Windsor	3,362
Windsor Locks	3,715
Suffield	3,841
Enfield	9,719
Rockville	9,087
Manchester	13,641
Stafford Springs	5,235
Glastonbury	4,796
Bristol	13,502
Southington	6,516

To-day the population of the above communities, especially Hartford, New Britain, and Bristol, has increased, perhaps, 30 per cent over the figures given.

Every one of these communities is in direct line for the benefits which would result from the developing of the water power at this part of the river. These cities and towns are among the most prosperous as well as the oldest in the State. Among their residents are thousands of people who are engaged in manufacturing and agricultural pursuits, and whose products go beyond the border of the United States. There are hundreds of prosperous mercantile and manufacturing concerns and hundreds of thousands of consumers who will indirectly feel the benefit of a substantial movement to increase the manufacturing facilities in their respective localities. Not only the places I have mentioned but several other important towns and cities in Connecticut and Massachusetts will be accommodated by the proposed improvements on the Connecticut River. There is no question but that with the increased population and continued industrial development the demand for water power is growing rapidly. It would be difficult to estimate the great advantages to the industries of northern Connecticut which are bound to follow when the proposed project opens up this new source of power.

The firm belief in the ultimate success of the project is greatly strengthened by the personnel of those who are back of the enterprise. They are substantial men of affairs who have achieved marked success in other lines and who are identified with the largest commercial and manufacturing interests in their respective towns, and it may be expected that they will bring to this important undertaking the same ability, enterprise, fair dealing, and judgment that have characterized their endeavors in the past.

The Connecticut Valley is anxious to make the most of the natural resources of the Connecticut River. In my speech in the House of Representatives on March 21, 1914, I mentioned the reasons for the widespread desire for the improvement of the Connecticut River. The Connecticut rises in the extreme northern portion of New Hampshire and flows in a southerly direction between that State and Vermont, forming the boundary line between these two States, and through Massachusetts and Connecticut, emptying into Long Island Sound and Saybrook, about 30 miles to the eastward of New Haven and about 40 miles to the westward of New London. Its entire watershed is said to be about 11,000 square miles, of which only about 850 square miles are below Hartford. Most of the important tributaries of the Connecticut River join it above Hartford. Below Hartford there are only five that may be considered of any importance. The Park or Hog River enters the Connecticut from the westward at Hartford about 4,100 feet below the highway bridge, and the Hockanum River flows into it from the eastward about 5,000 feet below the mouth of the Park River. At Middletown, Little River flows in from the westward, and just above East Haddam the Salmon River and, a short distance above Essex, Eight Mile River empty in from the eastward.

As to the possibilities of the freight-traffic development of the river, the value of freight transported on the river in 1917 was about $50,000,000; and the tonnage figures pointed toward the million being coal, lumber, building materials, fertilizer, petroleum products, and miscellaneous steamboat freight. Furthermore it costs New England manufacturers nearly $3 to bring every dollar's worth of coal to the section, according to reliable figures. How long can New England expect to do business under this handicap with the aggressive interior and west, so much more favorably situated in regard to the food supply and the market?

An idea of the large number of people who are in position to be benefited by the development of the river is given by referring to the population of the cities and towns concerned. The communities in Connecticut interested in the river improvements have approximately 800,000 inhabitants. They are in the front rank among New England's manufacturing towns, and their products, which are so diversified that they range all the way from an ordinary pin to an automobile, are shipped to all sections of the civilized world.

Historical records show that a hundred or more years ago elaborate plans were commenced for the development of the Connecticut River. A system of canals was proposed, and charters were secured in Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. Under the Connecticut charter, which was granted in 1824, the recipient was given permission to widen the channel of the river and remove obstructions from that part of the river between the bridge at Hartford and the city of Springfield. Authority to construct canals was also given. Extensive improvements were made at that time, and it is said that at that period the Connecticut River entered upon its era of greatest commercial activity. According to the records, the whole river was open to navigation from Hartford, Conn., to Wells River, Vt. The river is about 345 miles long. Freight was carried in flatboats with capacity of 30 to 40 tons.

The Connecticut Valley is one of the most important tobacco-producing districts in the United States, the crop for last year alone being valued at nearly $12,000,000 for that part of the valley within the confines of Connecticut. The river passes right through the heart of the tobacco belt. The problem of irrigation engages the attention of the growers, and the Department of Agriculture is assisting along constructive lines; but the solution of the whole situation would be hastened if, through the present measure, the way can be opened for the irrigation of this large district.

Mr. TILSON. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment before he leaves that subject?

Mr. LONERGAN. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. TILSON. In regard to the water power at Windsor Locks, not only will that improvement give water power and not impede navigation, but will it not really make navigation possible which now is practically impossible?

Mr. LONERGAN. Oh, yes; between Hartford and Springfield and Holyoke, Mass.

Connecticut is the munitions State of the Union. A greater part of its manufacturing industries are producing munitions and materials of war than the industries in any other State in the Union. The crying demand is for more power. Every available water power on its nonnavigable streams has been developed to its limit. There are thousands of horsepower on its navigable streams that have not been developed because of failure of Congress to legislate. Last winter many factories engaged in the production of war materials were obliged to shut down on account of lack of fuel, although a few miles away water power on navigable streams remained undeveloped and the waters running to waste.

Those who have studied this situation in Connecticut are convinced that power shortage will constitute a very serious obstacle to the production of materials vitally needed at present in the war. In the district I have the honor to represent, the 40,000 horsepower running to waste at Windsor Locks, if developed, would have saved the transportation of more than 200,000 tons of coal, and released those cars and railroad facilities for the transportation of other articles and help relieve the freight congestion which New England is suffering from. Freight embargo after freight embargo has been placed on New England on account of the inability of the railroads to transport the coal, raw materials, and finished products to and from our factories. Immediate relief from this condition is demanded. It is a vital necessity as a war measure and relief can not come too quickly.

Another great argument for the development of our water powers is the imperative necessity that we produce sufficient fixed nitrogen in this country to meet its requirements.

The development of water power is more closely related to the production and conservation of food than any other project that has been proposed. Other countries with lands in a high state of cultivation many years ago utilized their water powers in the production of atmospheric nitrogen for use as fertilizer. This country, up to the beginning of the war, was dependent largely upon the Chilean nitrate fields for its supply of fertilizer. Since then the price of Chilean nitrate has advanced from $40 to $85 a ton, and even at that price a sufficient supply can not be obtained on account of the lack of ships to transport it. The development of cheap water power furnishes the only other source of supply for this product. The fixation of the nitrogen of the atmosphere as a fertilizer through the electric furnace, using cheap hydroelectric power, ranks among the most important of the economic and industrial elements of this generation. The manufacture of air fertilizers, so far advanced and so well established in France, Italy, Norway, and Germany, as well as in other countries, promises to give us abundant and cheap fertilizers, and the fertilizer industry is recognized to-day as the most important of all in its relation and possibilities for reducing the high cost of living. Only by the utilization of our great water powers and the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen can we ever meet European competition in commerce. The countries of Europe on lands that have been in cultivation for thousands of years use double the amount of fertilizer per acre that is used in this country, and for double the amount of fertilizer the European farmer pays no more than the American farmer pays for half the amount, and as a result the yield per acre in Europe is double that in the United States.

Fertilizer in this country will not be cheaper while the war lasts under present methods of manufacture, even if it can be obtained at all, nor cheap enough after the war is over for generous use unless it is made by cheap hydraulic power.

Nitrogen in the form of nitric acid is the main constituent of all explosives used in war, and the immediate development of our wasting water powers and the establishment of atmospheric-nitrogen plants is an immediate war necessity.

The necessity for news-print paper is recognized everywhere. This can only be secured in sufficient quantities by the use of cheap hydroelectric power in the far West. The great unused stands of pulp-wood timber are almost without exception in sections of this country where the available water powers lie either in the public domain or on navigable streams. As power is absolutely essential in the conversion of wood into paper pulp, it is obvious that we can not remedy this situation without the passage of a bill permitting the development of water powers. This is one form of practical relief that Congress can extend to newspapers in a very trying situation, and one that is daily becoming worse.

This bill is therefore a necessity both for purposes of war and purposes of peace. After the war, when the nations have grappled as never before for world supremacy in trade, industry, and commerce, no factor will be so important and so necessary to industrial expansion and growth as cheap electric power in unlimited quantities. Action by Congress is all that prevents the utilization of the vast amount of energy contained in the undeveloped water powers of this country. The country needs it and demands that the development of these water powers be utilized.

Mr. Chairman, I have touched in a general way upon the reasons, peculiar to Connecticut, which should prompt us to pass the present legislation at the earliest opportunity. What is true of Connecticut is, I am sure, true of every State in the Union. The question is no longer a local one. For that matter it is no longer a strictly national measure, for its possibilities have reached out until they have assumed an international aspect. Our whole strength, with the strength of our associates in the war, is bent toward winning the great conflict. The passage of the present measure will enable us to grant still more aid to our allies and bring to an earlier conclusion the world struggle into which we have entered. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, the allies have acted wisely in not having heretofore taken any definite action in Russian affairs, but I believe that the time has arrived when prompt and material assistance should be rendered to that element of loyal Russians who are opposing German aggressions in Russia.

The allies are warranted in effectively opposing any Russian organization distinctively pro-German and cooperating in arms with Germany and as a necessary sequence in rendering aid and assistance of every kind to any Russian organization or group distinctively proally, and especially the loyal element that has never broken faith with the allies; in other words, the allies have the same right and duty to save Russia for the true and loyal Russians as they have to save France for the French.

Vague and unconfirmed reports have been circulated relative to the alleged assassination of the Czar. It is reasonable to conclude that they are not true. In the first place, if they were true the world would have known far more than has been published about the manner in which it was done and its effect and bearing on the entire war situation. Second, the loyal Russians have all to lose and nothing to gain by bringing such a disaster to their country. Third, the only element that would be parties to the crime, the Bolsheviki, would not venture to attempt it without the consent and approval of Germany, which it will never get so long as the Kaiser entertains the hope of placing the Czar back on the Russian throne. The Bolsheviki are dominated and controlled by Germany; they take their orders from Berlin, and yet Germany is ready to throw them overboard the instant it becomes expedient to do so by reason of their inability to retain their hold on Russian affairs, which hold is rapidly waning. The editorial in the Washington Post of date July 10, 1918, entitled "The struggle over Russia," presents the situation very aptly and is as follows:

THE STRUGGLE OVER RUSSIA.

It is not generally known that Count von Mirbach, the German minister recently slain in Moscow, made a secret proposition to the middle-of-the-road Russians about May 20, offering in Germany's name to throw over the Bolsheviki and revise the treaty of Brest-Litovsk more liberally for the Russians, if the Russians would agree to this separate peace and keep the allies at arm's length. Count von Mirbach promised the Russians that a German force would enter Moscow and Petrograd and drive the Bolsheviki out within 24 hours from the signing of the protocol.

The Russians who received this proposal from the German minister rejected it instantly. Nevertheless, they did not question the intent of the German Government to execute the proposal to the letter if it should be accepted. The proposal was not a mere piece of German duplicity, but was evidently in pursuance of Germany's solid conviction that the Bolsheviki could not retain their hold upon Russian affairs, even with German support. Germany, being unable to overrun Russia with soldiers, must exercise diplomacy while the struggle is on along the western front. Russia is certain to coalesce the scattered elements of political union in some form. Even chaos evolves some limitations and works toward order. The Russian necessities will compel the creation of some kind of government. It can not be Bolsheviki government, since the cornerstone of Bolshevism is discrimination which sets neighbors to slitting one another's throats and disputing all authority. Trotzky at this moment is engaged in the task of arming poor peasants so that they may rob the rich peasants. If this is not a sure method of avoiding success in government, none was ever invented.

Since the Germans are practical and foresee the inevitable downfall of Bolshevism in Russia, it is quite reasonable to expect them to cast about for an element in Russia which will organize a government and make separate peace to suit Germany. No doubt this work is going on with great energy. Unless German intriguants and corruptionists are busily at work among Russian political parties and leaders, the brains that engineered the wonderful disintegration of Russia have lost their cunning.

It is to Germany's advantage to have a friendly government in Russia, not mere anarchy. There is no advantage to the enemy in attempting to swallow Russia, at any rate not now. It is costly to support a weak government and dangerous to support a treacherous one. A German-made government in Russia—that is, an iron rule by German military governors, would be costly, ineffective, and perilous, besides interfering with Germany's obvious plans in other parts of the world. Therefore the best plan for Germany to adopt is that which Count von Mirbach attempted to put into effect; a new compact with a strong element, to be set up in place of the Bolsheviki.

If that is Germany's aim in Russia, having in view, of course, the most speedy exploitation of Russian materials for German use, then the task of the allies is made somewhat clearer. Evidently it is not wise for the allies to deal with the Bolsheviki, for they are important now, and would surely be destroyed by Germany if they should last long enough to make a deal with the allies. The allies should lose no time in advising the Russian people that plans are on foot to aid them to recover possession of their own government in every root and branch. The Russians should be warned not to countenance any bargain with the Germans through any political party or agency, under any guise, no matter how plausibly the advantages of separate peace with Germany may be set forth. They should be reminded that offers to revise the treaty of Brest-Litovsk are empty assurances of changes in a scrap of paper. Germany violated the treaty before the ink was dry.

The resurrection of Russia is not the long and heart-breaking task it has been held out to be, if the allies will undertake it promptly and effect it according to well laid and workable plans. It is a struggle of wits more than of guns, although there will be bloodletting. Let the allies always work with and through the Russians, for the Russians, and they will win. The regeneration should begin in Siberia, where the people are unaffected by Bolshevism and are opposed to separate peace. With Siberia strong and organized, the redemption of Great Russia would follow in spite of German intrigue and German guns.

I concur in the views expressed in the editorial as to the manner in which Russia is to be resurrected and regenerated. It has been disintegrated province by province, it can be rehabilitated in like manner, and Siberia is unquestionably one of the beginning points.

The most recent and reliable dispatches state that a substantial movement has already been inaugurated by the Czecho-Slovaks which, if promptly supported, will save Russia from complete German control. The situation can not be better set forth and described than is done by another editorial in the Washington Post of date July 7, 1918, entitled "The opportunity in Russia," as follows:

THE OPPORTUNITY IN RUSSIA.

Providence has shown more than once that it is on the side of the allies, notwithstanding the fact that Germany usually has had the heaviest battalions. Nowhere has fortune favored the allies more strikingly than in the interposition of the Czecho-Slovaks in Siberia at the psychological moment when the allies are debating the delicate question of sending armed forces to bolster up Russia. While the United States has delayed a decision on this question it has been answered by events. Armed allied forces are actually at work bolstering up Russia. To the small nation of Bohemia belongs the credit of being the first of the allies to extend a helping hand to Russia. This little nation is not yet fully born, although several allies have recognized its independence. The United States has not yet given that encouragement to the Czecho-Slovak people.

The question now before the allies is, Shall we join with our ally Bohemia in aiding Russia in Siberia, or shall we stand off and see the Bolsheviki arm German and Austrian prisoners, sweep the Czecho-Slovaks out of Siberia, and turn Russia over to Germany?

If the Czecho-Slovaks were enemies of the Russian people, the allies could easily decide. Or if Russia were not an ally of the entente, the allies could leave her to her fate. But President Wilson has just said that Russia remains an ally, and everybody knows that it is true. The betrayers of Russia are not Russia, any more than the American pacifists and defeatists are America. Are the Russian people attacking the Czecho-Slovaks? On the contrary, they welcome them and recognize them as friends. It is only the Germans and their agents, the Bolsheviki, who are disturbed by the presence of the Czecho-Slovaks in Siberia. The Germans will not stick at anything to eject the Czecho-Slovaks, for two reasons: First, in order to fasten their grip on Russia; and second, for the sake of discouraging the revolutionary Bohemians in Austria. If the allies permit the Czecho-Slovaks to be defeated or ejected from Siberia, the Germans and Magyars of Austria will say to the Bohemians, "Look at your false friends, the allies! They are treating you as they treated Belgium and Serbia and Roumania. They have left your forces in the lurch. You will always be betrayed by the French and the British and the Americans. If you join them, you will meet the fate of Serbia." Thus the failure of the allies to help the Czecho-Slovak forces will react disastrously in Austria as well as in Russia.

The Russian people need only a rallying point around which to meet and recover their battle spirit. They do not want German domination. They hate the Bolsheviki. The Bolsheviki do not have the support of the peasants in Russia, and many of the workmen's organizations have deserted them. The Bolsheviki are now nakedly exposed as German tools. Are the allies to cater to them?

Some officials of the United States Government take the position that they must not "take sides" in Russian affairs, as though the Bolsheviki were equally to be considered with the remainder of the Russians. That is most illogical and dangerous. Since the Bolsheviki are pro-German, the refusal to "take sides" against them is equivalent to taking an impartial position between Germany and Russia. Is that where the United States wishes to be found? No wonder the allied governments are hammering frantically at the gates of Washington, sounding the alarm concerning Russia.

A great opportunity to save Russia has suddenly appeared in the providential appearance of the Czecho-Slovak forces in Siberia. Those forces merely need allied support to serve as the rock of salvation for the great Slav Republic. Small contingents should be speedily sent forward by each allied power to operate in Siberia under one commander. An interallied civil commission should be created forthwith to go to Siberia and develop and direct the allied policy of aid to Russia. This civil commission should have supreme power and the military authorities should execute its will. No attempt should be made to build up a great allied army for operations against Germany. No army could march at present from Siberia to the western front of Russia, nor could a German army go to Siberia. The sole purpose of the allied forces would be to establish order and enable the Russian people to organize their government independent of Germany or the Bolsheviki agents of Germany.

There is not the slightest doubt that with an allied stabilizing force in Siberia the level-headed elements in Russia would rally and organize their communities and rapidly build up their own defensive forces. In due time they would hold a national assembly, organize a Russian government, and throw out the Germans. The recovery of Russian territory from the German thieves is a part of the allied program, in which Russia, as a strong and faithful ally, would cheerfully join.

It is my belief that the ultimate aim and purpose of the Kaiser is to put the Czar back on the Russian throne if it is possible for him to do so, and it is my further belief that he is putting forth and straining every effort in the most subtle manner to accomplish this.

He is influenced in so doing by the bonds of family ties, by the knowledge that a Russian democracy lying alongside of Germany and Austria means the downfall and end of the Hohenzollerns and Hapsburgs; furthermore, he does not underestimate the significance of the fact that the Czar is the head of the established Church of Russia, which wielded the most powerful influence in the former empire. He is fully aware that although the Bolsheviki have desecrated and despoiled the church—a fatal mistake—that it is destined to be reestablished. Again, he with all others knows that Bolshevism, which breeds and engenders chaos, is self-destructive, which when it has served his purpose to accomplish his ends will go down in history as a natural nightmare.

I have never believed that the enforced abdication of the Czar was an advantage to the allies. The Czar's army had fought faithfully and well. His is the only army that has invaded Germany during this war, and it was this invasion, approaching uncomfortably close to Berlin, that caused the withdrawal of a sufficient number of the German forces invading France to maks possible the French victory at the battle of the Marne.

The German strategists were fully cognizant of the extreme peril of extending their line of communication too far into the vast domain of Russia. They were equally well aware of the widespread smoldering fire of revolution, ready to erupt if an opportunity was presented. There never was so fertile a field for intrigue with promises of such satisfactory results.

Utter chaos was the end in view and in this way only could Russia be rendered ineffective and eliminated. The manner in which the poorly equipped Russian army fought clear up to the time of the dethronement of the Czar warrants the belief that he was not a party to the clever and subtle intrigue of Germany, culminating in his abdication, although the ease with which it was accomplished might justify suspicion. I am rather disposed to believe he was betrayed by those whom Germany had succeeded in corrupting, cooperating with and assisted by those revolutionists who believe that it was the opportune time to throw off the galling yoke of oppression, thereby hoping to establish a more liberal government.

Germany foresaw the inability of these incoherent and extremely radical elements to overthrow the established Government and then suddenly organize and maintain a stable Government of their own, which they never will be able to do.

The great masses of the Russian people being unwilling to suffer the ills they were then enduring, flew to others they knew not of. Now they have awakened to find their present condition worse than their first, and for this reason Germany knows the element that must and will ultimately control Russia prefers and will welcome the Czar back on the throne rather than the present conditions.

It therefore behooves the allies not to forget the valuable service rendered by the Czar when and as long as he was in position to do so. There has been no overt act on his part, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that justifies the conclusion of bad faith on his part toward his allies.

It is to be hoped that, in so far as it is possible, no opportunity has been neglected to convey to him the sympathy and the utmost assurance of the desire and anxiety of the nations with which he was allied to extricate him from the extremely deplorable situation in which he is now placed. The initial step is an interallied movement extending a helping hand, always working with and through the loyal Russians for Russia.

I am convinced that the loyal and patriotic Russians will flock to any place that promises safety and security for life and property, even though the place be remote and small in the beginning. Once a rallying place can be found or a city of refuge established, it will spread and increase in area and influence with each passing day until Russia, having passed through the valley of the shadow, will again arise a newborn Government, not unlike the British Government or, better still, like our own. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the collapse of Russia as a fighting force, the so-called Brest-Litovsk treaty of peace, "a treaty of amity" dictated by the devil at the point of the sword, the confusion resulting from the overthrow of a Government which had sapped the vitality of its people, one political revolution following upon the heels of another, the withdrawal of large bodies of men engaged on the eastern front to add to the slaughtering capacity of German junkerdom, the desire to see an eastern front reestablished, a feeling of anger at a withdrawing cofighter, mingled with a profound sympathy for the agony of the Russian people, all this confusion of incomplete thoughts and resentments added to the lack of definite information as to what is really transpiring in that land of sorrow makes the problem of aiding Russia the most complex one that has presented itself to thinking men.

That the Czar's government was an abomination very few will deny. It has turned a land literally flowing with milk and honey into a land of blood and tears. It has pitted nationality against nationality, race against race. It has implanted hatred in the hearts of the simplest. It did not really govern. It just weighed down upon the people. The only time the people knew that there was a government at Petrograd was when something or somebody was being taken away from them. It was hazardous for the allies to have such a partner.

It is unfortunate that the upheaval resulting from the overthrow of the Czar took place when the world was engaged in a death grapple with German militarism.

We must be careful not to make this temporary reverse a source of continuous weakness. Revolutions are not Sunday-school picnics. They follow no prescribed code of good manners. A revolution means the upsetting of things. No country seems to be inclined to benefit by the experience of another.

Russia has to live through her revolution in her own way. In addition, the Russian revolution was something more than a political uprising, something more than a mere desire to change the form of government. People do not fight for abstractions; not for any length of time, anyway. What the great masses of industrious and hard-working peasants were after was an opportunity to earn their bread, and to the peasantry, who constitute the great majority of the Russian people, it meant the right to have access to the land. While in other countries national ownership of land is considered the ideal of the extremely radical, the peculiar Russian institutions of collective ownership of land by the village community has prepared the minds of the people for the doctrine that freedom means access to the land and that any system of government which prevents that is fundamentally wrong.

The question of distribution of land became the center around which all political groups were compelled to form themselves. The advocacy of the collective ownership of land, growing out of Russian conditions struck terror into the hearts of the feudal lords and of the land-owning classes everywhere. No greater danger can be imagined to German junkerism, which is nothing more than feudal landlordism and militarism combined, than the presence to the east of Germany of a prosperous republic, with feudalism abolished, landlordism eliminated, and the principle established that only he is entitled to the possession of the land who works thereon. It is this fear that will explain the peace with Ukraina. Ukraina was the granary of Russia and of Europe. Its black soil was famous throughout the world. The principle of the collective ownership of land was unknown in Ukraina. The Russian revolution threatened to extend the principle of collective ownership to all parts of Russia. Germany hastened to cut off Ukraina from Russia. She used to accomplish her sinister purpose the very principle of self-determination. The Ukranians are of the same racial and linguistic stock as the Russians and of the same religion. In their schools Russian has been taught for generations. There has never been any serious separatist movement there. They suffered under the Czar, but in common with the rest of the Russian people. The principle of self-determination was used by the Ukranian landlords to check the spread of the ideals of revolutionary Russia and to intrench themselves and their possessions as landlords with the aid of the kindred spirits of the German junkerdom. To-day Ukraina is under a German dictatorship with half a million German troops engaged in rooting out the revolutionary elements and in crushing the peasantry who have no enmity toward Russia and whose hope is to form part of a federated Russian Republic.

The geographical and historical boundaries of Ukraina are uncertain. This offers an opportunity to Germany to stretch out its destructive arm deep into the very heart of Russia and claim everything as Ukraina.

Let us at this juncture note that the only people who are showing fight and who are keeping a half million Germans away from the western front are the very same Soviet elements whom some would repudiate as outlaws.

The industrial labor movement of Russia is necessarily more radical than that of other countries. From the principle of the democratic control of land it is not far to the principle of democratic control and management of industry, and from the very first day of the revolution a struggle ensued between those who believed that Russia had to pass through the rise and development of modern gigantic industry and between those who thought that Russia was ready to lay the basis for a cooperative industrial democracy. The latter group, together with the peasantry, are to all appearances in control of Russia to-day. That the very attempt to establish such a government should bring down upon them the hatred of all who are discomforted in Russia and the implacable enmity by all elements everywhere similarly situated could have easily been foreseen.

It is this soviet form of government, consisting of men periodically elected by delegates who are in their turn elected by local soviets—councils—of workmen and peasants, that forms the present government of Russia. While there are conflicting reports about various groups here and there disputing the authority of the soviet government, it seems to be certain that it manages to overcome its internal enemy.

It is not so fortunate, however, with its external enemy, Germany. The Brest-Litovsk peace came after a complete economic and military collapse of Russia. More than 20,000,000 of men had been put by the Czar in uniform. Not more than one-fourth could be used at the front. The rest, taken away from industry and agriculture, were but adding to the disorganization of life in Russia. A month before the revolution regiments were marching barefooted in the south of Russia. On the eve of the revolution the army at the front had only a 48-hour supply of food. Petrograd was starving. With the overthrow of the Czar all discipline disappeared in the army. The soldier knew that the government which had got him into the trenches had been overthrown. He did not see any further reason for fighting. He could not see why the German workers should not overthrow their Government and end the war. If the Czar was to be removed, the soldier could not see why the Czar's war should continue. The word "peace" has a charming effect. It did not take long before the demand for it became general. Every man in Russia capable of looking ahead saw the disaster that would follow a separate peace. The only way to stave off a separate agreement with Germany was to make an effort to obtain a universal settlement of the war.

On numerous occasions the Kerensky government promised a general interallied conference for the purpose of making a statement of the interallied war aims. The attempt of some Russian statesmen to induce the Russian people to continue the fight for the purpose of obtaining Constantinople could not appeal to the men who proclaimed the principle "no annexations, no indemnities." It only served to disclose the fact that secret treaties had been made providing for the alienation of lands from the defeated countries. The Government kept on delaying and the allied governments made a statement of the allied war aims only after the Kerensky government had fallen.

The revolution had been accomplished mainly through the efforts of the socialists. When the socialists demanded an opportunity to meet at an international socialist congress that was again frustrated by the allied governments. Things were going from bad to worse. Confidence in the allies was destroyed. The army was demoralized. In the last agonizing moments in the negotiations with Germany Trotzky and Lenine submitted a program for universal peace, but no one came to their aid. Germany was quick to take advantage of the situation.

Trotzky made an effort not to sign any peace treaty at all, proceeding along the lines followed in the case of a lost strike, but Germany insisted on a piece of paper. Having disregarded one treaty as a scrap of paper, she wanted to base her right of plunder upon another piece of paper. Had Germany been guided by statesmen and not by a militarist band, there was her opportunity. Had she treated Russia with kindness, had she refused to take advantage of her distress, had real friendly relations been restored, the vast resources of that enormous empire would have been at her disposal and she could have defied the allies forever. But her rulers know only the logic of the sword. She began a process of dismembering Russia. What she could not take herself she offered to Turkey.

What inexcusable folly it is for the allies to treat unfortunate Russia and the men who made the disastrous peace as the culprits! Russians are at liberty of accusing each other of having betrayed their country. This must not be done by the allies. Any group, any political organization, that would have concluded such an unfortunate arrangement would invite attack from friend and foe. The people wanted peace. For 11 months they were fed with promises. Their Government thought it would give them a breathing spell. The enemy refused to make it a real peace.

What is to be done now?

We have to aid Russia. She is entitled to the sympathy of the world if for no other reason because she has suffered so intensely. For nearly three years her men were dying in heaps, fighting with bare fists against the most thoroughly prepared military machine. Primarily an agricultural country, without any industries to speak of, she was waging a hopeless contest with one of the best developed industrial nations. Her breakdown was merely a question of time.

No Russian Government, unless it be that of the Czar, can be a friend of Germany. Russia is no friend of Germany to-day. Russia would welcome aid from the allies, and particularly from the United States. Let every form of economic and financial aid be extended to Russia. Let us stop talking military intervention. Let us stop choosing a government for her. If it be true that the men now at the head of the Russian Government are the agents of Germany, then there is no hope either for Russia or for the allies. We can not proceed upon any such theory as that.

No revolutionary government can guarantee stability. Revolutionary periods should be measured by days and weeks and not by decades. Nor is it possible to imagine the establishment of a government which would not meet opposition in some sections of Russia from some elements. How many days or months is a revolutionary government to continue before its existence is to be recognized? The Czar's government was a Russian institution. A government founded on the ruins of Czardom must be accepted as a Russian institution. We play into the hands of Germany by treating Russia as an outlaw. We are not bound to recognize the Brest-Litovsk peace. It can not be recognized unless the world is ready to have junkerism extended.

We should offer such aid as we can give to the now existing Government of Russia. It is more likely than not that the mere acceptance of industrial and financial help by the Soviet government would provoke further aggressive military action on the part of Germany and would intensify the spirit of resistance of Russia. It took the United States nearly three years to enter the war. We were prospering while Russia was bleeding. We can not afford to treat her as an outcast. Let us regard her rather as a fellow fighter, temporarily disabled.

Fortunately, Russia has a friend in the President of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WEBB, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PADGETT, indefinitely, on account of important business; and

To Mr. HICKS, indefinitely, on account of an official inspection trip with the Committee on Naval Affairs.

NATIONAL GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, to repeal the charter of the German-American Alliance.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3529) to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 25, 1907, entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. CANNON. Why repeal it? I do not recollect the legislation that incorporated the alliance that is referred to. I think it might be well if the gentleman from North Carolina would explain. I do not object, but I would like to know what are the provisions of the act to incorporate the German-American Alliance, if we ever incorporated it.

Mr. WEBB. Yes. They incorporated in 1907. It is a general charter, following very much along the line of other charters granted by Congress, giving them certain corporate rights and a corporate existence. A mass of testimony was taken before the Senate Judiciary Committee, explaining the activities of this alliance, both before we entered the war and since the war, and especially before we entered the war, showing that their activities were more pro-German than pro-American, and that they had carried on a propaganda in the United States which cultivated a segregation of Germans in this country as opposed to the Americanization of people of German blood.

I will say to my friend from Illinois that there must be four or five hundred pages of the testimony taken by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which the committee of the House had access to, and I reported a digest of it in the report filed by the committee when it recommended the disorganization of this German-American Alliance.

I will say further that this alliance has disorganized itself, disbanded, and gone out of business. It has dispensed with its money, and the last portion of its assets was given to some cause—I think probably the Red Cross—amounting to a few thousand dollars. But they themselves have voluntarily abrogated their charter, and this is simply a repealing act revoking the charter.

Mr. CANNON. Then there is "nothing doing" in this association at this time? They have dissolved?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; they have dissolved, as far as they can; but the charter itself has not been repealed.

Mr. CANNON. The law is still there, under which they could reorganize?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; the law is still there under which they could reorganize.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the gentleman desire to have it deduced that this alliance is substantially a disloyal alliance?

Mr. WEBB. I think there is much testimony in the hearings tending to show that, but I did not know that the gentleman wanted me to go into that in full. If the testimony is to be believed, this organization certainly has not acted as an American organization ought to act. It has abused the privileges that Congress gave it, and those privileges ought to be withdrawn by the power that gave them.

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman is satisfied that while there is nothing doing under this legislation, and the organization has disbanded, it is wise at this time to repeal the act; and if in the distant future some legislation might be indicated, the Congress then in existence might enact it and would enact it if it thought it proper?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I think it is the belief of the committee and of the Congress that acting under its charter the German-American Alliance has done enough already to deserve to have its charter repealed, and that is what we ought to do.

Mr. QUIN. Ought we not to repeal it as soon as possible and get that dirty snake out of the country? [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Of course all that is necessary for us to do is to pass this bill repealing it.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman from North Carolina understand that a large amount of the funds collected by the German-American Alliance were devoted to the campaign in opposition to prohibition?

Mr. WEBB. I think there was testimony along that line.

Mr. CANNON. For or against?

Mr. RANDALL. Against prohibition. The gentleman from North Carolina admits that a large portion of the funds collected by the German-American Alliance was devoted to the campaign against prohibition in various parts of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since other national charters of this kind have been granted, and bills have been introduced for other such incorporations, may I ask the gentleman whether he is familiar with the movement to create the German-American Alliance?

Mr. WEBB. I am not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was in the House when the bill granting this charter passed, was he not?

Mr. WEBB. I certainly was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that at that time a great deal of enthusiasm was manifested in the passage of the bill granting a charter?

Mr. WEBB. I do not recall that; no. The gentleman may. I certainly shared none of it, because I did not know anything about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There was a very strong movement for the passage of the bill, was there not?

Mr. WEBB. I do not recall that. My friend is probably right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It came up from every section of the country from citizens of German origin.

Mr. WEBB. I do not think it came from my part of the country, because we have not many German-Americans in my country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course it would not be patriotic to oppose this repeal, since this organization is now supposed to have been disloyal. In this connection I want to call attention to the fact that other nationalities have been asking for charters of this sort, and that other movements are on foot for national charters, and that efforts are being made, and will be made, to induce the Congress of the United States in other instances to do exactly what it did in this. Sometimes Congress has to unscramble the things that it does.

Mr. WEBB. The Congress reserved the right to repeal this charter, and it now proposes to exercise that right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This may be a lesson to Congress itself in matters of this kind.

Mr. FOCHT. I do not recall whether I was here at the time this German-American Alliance was chartered, although I rather think I was, but I do not remember the legislation. I should like to ask what the request for this legislation was predicated upon? What were set forth as the objects and purposes of the organization? It may be a latter-day thought that this German-American Alliance or some other alliance is offensive to us; and it is going to be more so, no matter who may apply for anything other than a straight American charter, which is all I will vote for in the future. [Applause.] If I voted for this one, I am sure I did it as others did, under a misapprehension. What could have been the purpose of such an organization when the charter was originally granted?

Mr. WEBB. I do not recall that.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] would have the impression go abroad that it was organized to oppose prohibition.

Mr. WEBB. I did not say that at all.

Mr. FOCHT. Then nobody knows what it was passed for?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Of course, in the presence of this great struggle, if there is a well-founded ground that this legislation ought to be repealed, notwithstanding, as the gentleman says, the corporation is dead, I am quite willing to cooperate as one Member of the House, but I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that as the sun comes up and the sun goes down, as the years come and go, as generations are born, live, and die—I want to call his attention to the fact that the statue of Frederick the Great in front of the War College has already been removed, and I think wisely removed, perhaps, but if you go down to Jackson Square there you will find on each corner thereof a statue of Lafayette, Kosciusko, Steuben, and Rochambeau. None of us want to tear down those statues, I take it. I am not speaking in opposition to the proposition, but God knows I do not know, and no Member within the sound of my voice knows, what the conditions may be 50 or 100 years from now. But if the gentleman, after investigation, thinks it is wise to repeal this legislation I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement for three or five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes. [Laughter.] Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, it is well known by the membership of the House on both sides that I have most strenuously, openly, and boldly opposed a recess of Congress, either by joint resolution or by agreement, for three days' recess, until the water-power bill has been considered and passed by the House. My reasons were that the House bill is an amendment to the Senate bill and if passed it could go immmediately to conference, while the recess either by joint resolution or otherwise was in force, and that the conferees could go ahead and figure out the differences and have a conference report ready when the two Houses reconvened for business after the expiration of the recess.

I have just been informed by the leader of the House that the Senate has agreed to and expects to pass a resolution this afternoon by which there will be no business transacted whatever until the 24th of August, during which time not even conferees could be appointed on the water-power bill, if passed by the House. Personally, I prefer to remain here next week and pass the bill, send it over to the other body, and let the responsibility rest with it for not appointing conferees. But no one man should undertake to enforce his personal views and opinions upon the entire Congress or upon the House of Representatives of 435 Members.

Now upon condition, and only upon such condition, will I consent that there shall be a joint resolution recess or a gentleman's agreement to adjourn every three days until the proposed recess is ended—and that is that the water-power bill shall be made the continuing order and that it shall be considered and disposed of after the recess before the revenue bill is taken up for consideration. The reason that I have opposed all the time having a recess prior to the consideration of this bill was that I believed that after the revenue bill was passed by the House and sent to the Senate and went to the Finance Committee to be considered, that during that time it would be impossible to keep a quorum in the House to pass the water-power bill, and that it would result in the absolute defeat of the bill in the end.

Now, with the privileged status given the bill and the assurance that the bill shall be considered and passed before the revenue bill is considered by the House, I have no objection to a recess to August 19, which is five days in advance of the expiration of the Senate's agreement to do no business, in which time we can consider and pass the water-power bill and send it to the Senate by the date set for actual business in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman inform the House what the President thinks of this suggestion?

Mr. SIMS. I have not said a word to the President about it, and he has not said a word to me, and I can not read his mind, except that I know he is always for what he thinks is the best interest of the country.

Mr. WALSH. I admire the gentleman's temerity in making a proposition of this importance without knowing what the Chief Executive thinks, particularly when the gentleman, in insisting upon the consideration of this water-power bill and its being passed before the recess, gave as a reason for it that the President was strongly of the opinion that the House should stay here and pass that measure. I want to congratulate the gentleman upon his courage.

Mr. SIMS. That would do no good now, provided the Senate adopts the resolution which I understand they are going to adopt.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CANNON. What is the gentleman's request?

The SPEAKER. He has not made any.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken in what I am about to suggest, as I was very much mistaken on a former occasion, but I believe that after the passage of the wire-control resolution and the passage through the House of the Agricultural appropriation bill a majority of the House is in favor of entering into a gentleman's agreement for an adjournment every three days until August 19. Of course, we can not enter into an agreement of this kind unless we make an arrangement with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in respect to the consideration of the water-power bill and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] in respect to the passage of the Agricultural appropriation bill in the House. It is not exactly proper to ask unanimous consent for an order of this kind, but I want to make an agreement or have an understanding with the House about it. If there be any objection to it, I hope the gentleman who entertains such an objection will make it now, so that we can not enter into the understanding. What I suggest is this, that after the passage of the wire-control bill and after the passage through the House of the Agricultural appropriation bill we begin to take a series of three-day recesses on Monday next, to be continued until August 19. That is, we will meet on Monday, and when we adjourn on that day we will adjourn until Thursday. When we meet on Thursday, we will then adjourn until the next Monday, and so on, until August 19, and that there will be no business, not even by unanimous consent, transacted upon the days upon which the House meets, and that a motion to adjourn will be made immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What does the gentleman mean by "no business"?

Mr. KITCHIN. I mean none whatever; no unanimous consent granted to extend remarks, or anything of that kind; that this agreement and understanding shall be entered into sincerely, with the intention of its being kept strictly by every Member of the House. When we meet on Monday next we may have to transact some little business, but after we adjourn on Monday, after the transaction of such business as we may have to take care of on that day, we shall adjourn until Thursday and then from Thursday to the next Monday, and so on.

When the House meets on Thursday, after the adjournment on Monday, it will be the understanding that there will be no business transacted; that the only thing to be done would be to call the House to order, for the Chaplain to open by prayer, for the reading and approval of the Journal, and then that a motion to adjourn shall be made and agreed to; and so on until August 19.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not taking into consideration the District appropriation bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. GARNER. The Senate is not going to do any business?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have the unanimous-consent agreement here which will be entered into by the Senate this afternoon, in which it is agreed that they will adjourn on Monday for three days, until Thursday, and from Thursday until Monday, and so on until August 24.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there no possibility of disposing of the District appropriation bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is with the understanding that no bills or resolutions of any kind shall be passed; nothing done but the routine business. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], I understand, will object to this unless he can obtain unanimous consent to take up on August 19 the water-power bill and make it the continuing order until disposed of.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to ask if the gentleman would not have to do one piece of business, and that is ask unanimous consent for the three-day adjournment?

Mr. KITCHIN. This agreement would include the asking of unanimous consent for the three-day adjournment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Because you can not have a three-day adjournment without unanimous consent.

Mr. KITCHIN. When we adjourn on Thursday, by unanimous consent it is agreed that the adjournment shall be over until the succeeding Monday, and that on Monday the adjournment shall be until the succeeding Thursday, and so forth.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The best way is to be perfectly candid with it and fair with each other. Now, I should not object, as a Member of the House, to the proposition that the gentleman makes, but if there is to be coupled with that proposition that the House shall meet five days before that time and agree that the water-power bill shall pass, considered and be passed by the 19th of August——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Disposed of.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman misunderstands me. I undertook to state that we could have no gentleman's agreement unless we got unanimous consent that when we came back on August 19 that the water-power bill would then be made a special order, a continuing order until disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. A continuing order. What does a continuing order mean, that the House can not take up any other business and displace that?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is what a continuing order is.

Mr. CANNON. Then I would not consent to do it; I am not willing thus far in advance——

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not mean until it was passed; I meant until it was disposed of, of course.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, what is the disposition of it?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, put it to a vote and it may be defeated or it may be recommitted.

Mr. CANNON. But it is to have the right of way before any other business is transacted and must be disposed of either by defeating it or otherwise disposed of before you can do any other business.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is just like it is right now.

Mr. CANNON. Not right now because we could raise the question of consideration any day.

Mr. GARNER. Exactly, we could do that on the 19th.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I do not think you can do that, not after you enter into this unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CANNON. I for one will not agree to tie the hands of the House that it must be disposed of before any other bill can be considered or any other business can be done.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Inasmuch as under the gentleman's suggestion no business whatever will be done before August 19, what advantage has the three-day arrangement over a regular recess adjournment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Because the Senate will not pass a regular recess adjournment. It passed one and the House turned it down. Now, their position is if you want a recess, make a gentleman's agreement. They are going to take care of themselves in making a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Suppose the House should propose one, should initiate and propose a recess adjournment?

Mr. KITCHIN. That has been put up to them and they said they would not vote for it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is a condition, not a theory.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he contemplates, in preferring his request, that the control of the telegraph and telephone bill shall be disposed of by passage through both branches; that is, dispose of the conference report?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I understand the Senate has practically agreed to pass it this afternoon just as it came from the House without amendment. Of course this agreement does not hold good until that becomes a law, until it passes both bodies and is agreed to and sent to the President.

And then the passage of the Agricultural bill through the House is the only condition precedent, and not for the Senate. The Senate will not act on that, I understand.

Mr. WALSH. May I further ask the gentleman a question? The gentleman's request, of course, does not include the condition to make the water-power bill the continuing order?

Mr. KITCHIN. But I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] would object to this gentleman's agreement unless we could satisfy him and his committee.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman one further question; whether in his own experience in the House the desire for a recess or adjournment, or any other emergency, has, by unanimous consent, dispensed with the rule giving a revenue bill, a measure having the highest privilege, the right of way over any other legislation?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know that I recall any, but I would say to the gentleman it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Ways and Means Committee will be able to report a bill of $8,000,000,000 by August 20, or the 24th or the 25th. It will be somewhere between August 20 and August 30. This committee has been working and will continue to work every day. It will not have two hours in a day of recess from now until it completes the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Many other gentlemen on the committee think it will take until September 1 before we can possibly report the bill out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest to the gentleman—and I would like the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, because I understood him to raise some objection—that it would be of real value, in my judgment, and I think the chairman will bear me out, in saving time, if the Ways and Means Committee could have the opportunity, without having to come to the House during sessions, to consider and to frame this revenue bill; that we will have very much more time and that we can do better work.

Mr. KITCHIN. We can save two weeks at least.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. To illustrate, I came down this morning to the Capitol at 8 o'clock, and the clerks and myself went to work at 9 o'clock. I have been called out of that room up to the present time by 18 different Members of Congress who wanted to see me about something. And I really have not worked an hour and a half. I have not spent an hour and a half in that room to-day, when I hoped to spend 8 or 10 hours to get the bill ready for Monday, or the sketch of a bill, so that our committee could begin to work on it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that the gentleman from Illinois, in giving consent to the arrangement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], perhaps will really be in the interest of the revenue bill rather than an obstacle?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee and the members of his committee, although they give this unanimous consent to make up a special order, would, if they saw there was going to be a delay in the revenue bill——

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] only desires that the bill on the 19th of August shall have the same status as it has now.

Mr. SIMS. Exactly; only with this difference, that the water-power bill shall be considered and disposed of by the House before the House takes up the revenue bill.

Mr. CANNON. I will never consent to that.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] yield to a suggestion?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. After the gentleman from Texas is through. He has been on his feet asking me to yield.

Mr. GARNER. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, since the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that he would not under any condition enter into a unanimous-consent agreement based upon the idea or agreement that the water-power bill was to be taken up and considered and disposed of before the revenue bill was considered——

Mr. CANNON. Before any other business.

Mr. GARNER. Before any other business. With the assurance of the leader of the House and the gentleman from Tennessee that he would have an entire week, so far as his assistance could give it to him, outside of Calendar Wednesday——

Mr. KITCHIN. We will dispose of Calendar Wednesday now.

Mr. GARNER. We can do it by unanimous consent now. But with the entire week in which to consider his bill, commencing on the 19th day of August, why can he not let this unanimous-consent agreement be entered into without the consent that his bill shall be considered and disposed of before the revenue bill? That will give him the entire week to consider his bill, with the assistance of the majority leader, and with his assurance, so far as his influence can go. It does seem to me that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] ought to make that agreement.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if there should be any attempt to use this bill to prevent consideration of the revenue bill or any other important legislation, I would withdraw at once any binding consent agreement for its further consideration. But you all know that if the revenue bill is considered first, we will have no quorum here after that bill is passed until the bill is passed by the Senate and is returned to the House. But if the water-power bill is to be acted on first, everybody will remain for the revenue bill, because it is a war measure. If on the 19th of August we take up this bill where we may have left off, and no dilatory tactics are resorted to in order to prevent its passage by the 24th, that it will be passed. My further belief is that the good faith of the committee of which the gentleman from North Carolina himself is the chairman is such that they would not report the revenue bill or ask its consideration, so far as can now be seen, but no one can foresee possible future developments that might demand a change in this program.

Mr. GARNER. Suppose the gentleman from North Carolina assures the gentleman from Tennessee that the Committee on Ways and Means will not ask for right of way for the purpose of considering its bill until the 19th of August, giving the entire week to consider the gentleman's bill. Would he still insist?

Mr. SIMS. It would be so apparent on the face of it that the proposal was so fair, square, and sincere that I would not have the boldness or the hardihood to do a manifest wrong simply in order to be consistent and uselessly persistent. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I have not the floor; otherwise I would yield.

Mr. GOOD. I observe that this bill that the gentleman is talking about passed the Senate on the 14th day of December last. It then came to the House, and it was reported out of the gentleman's committee only on the 28th day of June, 1918. If the bill has all the importance that the gentleman now attaches to it, why did he not report it out months ago? Take the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It is not passed. That bill carries increases of salary for a thousand of the poorest-paid employees in all this country—the school-teachers—who receive around $500 or $600 a year, and they do not get any increase under this continuing resolution. There are a great many other things before the House that are of importance to the House. Here is a bill tied up in committee for six months, and now all at once it becomes so important that the gentleman wants to tie the hands of every Member of the House, or, he says, there will be no understanding or agreement. So far as I am concerned, there will be none unless the bill that the gentleman has takes its place on the calendar with the rest of the business that is before the House. That is what ought to be done.

Mr. SIMS. Let me reply to that. The implication is a charge against the Water Power Committee. If the gentleman knows all the facts, he could not be fair without stating them all, and the gentleman did not state them all. The gentleman knows that the committee was created by a special rule of the House at the request of the President; a committee composed of six members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, six members of the Committee on Public Lands, and six members of the Committee on Agriculture, and the gentleman knows that all three of those committees have had very important legislation to consider besides the water-power bill. The railroad-control bill was taken up immediately by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and it did not become a law until March 21. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and the ranking member and the other gentlemen connected with it had very important legislation before the Committee on Agriculture, and the Committee on Public Lands had charge of what is called the oil-leasing bill. Now we had practically to scrap three committees with just as important legislation before them as this bill was in order to consider this bill. I want to say that the Committee on Water Power held continuous sessions, and all the sessions that could possibly be held consistent with the necessary and important separate committee legislation that they had to take care of, and any insinuation to the effect that the Water Power Committee has not done everything it could to report this bill as soon as possible is wholly unwarranted by any facts that the gentleman can cite.

Mr. GOOD. I am not making any charge against the committee. I am only making the charge now that if the bill had the importance that the gentleman now attaches to it, he would have seen to it that the committee was organized and the bill reported out long ago.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman attributes to me too much power.

Mr. GOOD. With the aid of the President, I know the gentleman could have called it up months ago.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] wanted to ask a question. I promised to yield to him.

Mr. LITTLE. The question I was trying to ask was about the same as that which was asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING]. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] wanted to be assured that his bill would have all the right of way. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is willing, as I understand it, to agree that it shall have the same right of way that it has now; and the suggestion was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] that the gentleman from Tennessee ought to be willing to let this agreement be entered into without objection if it is agreed that his bill shall be put right where it is now, and this strikes me as right and fair enough.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] accepted the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that he shall have the week beginning August 19 for the consideration of the water-power bill; but that it shall not displace the revenue bill or conference reports if, at the end of that week, the revenue bill is ready to report.

Mr. CANNON. I am willing, as one Member, to agree to a recess, and I am perfectly willing that when the House comes together again the water-power bill shall have the same right that it now has, and I will not go a step further.

Mr. TILSON. That it shall be the unfinished business, as it is now? Is not that proper?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. TILSON. It is the unfinished business now.

Mr. WALSH. If you make it the unfinished business you can not displace it with anything else.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am a member of the Water Power Committee; but it seems to me that if at any time the great revenue bill comes in nothing whatever should delay that one single day, and I would appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] to take the chances of the revenue bill coming in when we first meet again, because when it does come in it ought to have the first chance.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I agree to what the gentleman says.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on August 19, when we get back here, the water-power bill be given the same status that it now has.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARNER. It will have that status anyway.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the situation now. No request for unanimous consent is necessary.

Mr. GARNER. No request for unanimous consent is necessary. It has that status now.

Mr. KITCHIN. If it is understood by the House that it is unnecessary to have such unanimous consent, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. SIMS. Upon the assurance that we will have that week, so far as you now know.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. That does not bind the House.

Mr. WALSH. It was brought in here by a special rule, was it not?

Mr. SIMS. No; by unanimous consent, not by a special rule.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. What assurance has the gentleman from the Senate that they have entered into a unanimous-consent agreement that the wire bill is going to pass to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no assurance that a unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into, except that the Democratic leader of the Senate told me that they would pass the wire bill to-day, and the request that I make is conditioned upon the passage of the wire bill—that is, upon its becoming a law.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Suppose they should put an amendment on the wire bill, then what?

Mr. KITCHIN. Then this agreement would amount to nothing, and we would have to enter into another one.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman stated that he made this suggestion, and that he wanted anyone who raised any objection to state it now.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want to say to the gentleman that my position is this: The President came here and said we ought to stay here and pass certain important legislation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; but go ahead.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Well, that is my construction of what he said. Now, I have tried to stay here through the winter, spring, and summer, and I think I have as much at stake as any other Member. I did go away on the 4th of July to attend a Fourth of July celebration. As soon as I got home I read in the papers that a certain gentleman from Mississippi, who is now in Washington, said that "the congressional slacker who would desert his post at this time," and so forth, "deserves the execration of all patriotic men. A soldier in front of the enemy who would perpetrate such a crime would be shot." I want to know if all the Senators indorsed this postponement of the session of the Senate until August 26, and if every one of them agrees to that unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. KITCHIN. I talked with Senator MARTIN, the Democratic leader of the Senate, and my understanding is that, before the session closes to-day, by unanimous-consent agreement they will begin on Monday three-day adjournments, which will last until August 24, and that no business except the morning routine business will be considered and that no bills or resolutions will be passed in the meantime.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I understood from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] that the President of the United States was very insistent upon the passage of this water-power legislation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Senator SIMMONS and I had a conference with the President last night, and although we did not go down to see the President about a recess, the matter of a recess on the part of the Senate, a gentleman's agreement, until August 26 came up, and also the question of an adjournment around August 20. I asked the President the direct question if he would object, or did he have any legislation that it was necessary to pass before August 20, and did he object to an adjournment by both Houses until that time. I asked him if an adjournment until August 20 would have his approval, and he said, "Yes"; that he had no legislation at this time. So I say that the President approves of this agreement.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement in justice to myself. I have not seen the President since the gentleman from North Carolina talked with him, but I have no question that the gentleman from North Carolina states the facts. When it was published in the newspapers some weeks ago that there was an agreement for a recess and that the President did not object I went immediately to see him and told him if that was his view about the matter I was not going to ask that the water-power bill be considered. He told me, in substance, that in a conversation with two Senators and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], he himself brought up the question of considering the water-power bill, and that he was assured by them that a recess would not delay the final passage of the water-power bill—that immediately after the Congress had had its recess and the revenue bill was disposed of the water-power bill would be considered, and he said, therefore, that he interposed no objection. But he said he was very anxious to have it passed, and I reported that statement to the members of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman tell us what the status of the appropriation bill from the Agricultural Committee, carrying about $12,000,000, is in the Senate?

Mr. KITCHIN. That has been postponed by agreement until August 26.

Mr. GARNER. That has already been agreed to be postponed until August 26.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I think until we know exactly what the Senate does I shall have to object.

Mr. KITCHIN. This agreement is to be based upon the fact that the wire bill will be passed, that the Agricultural bill will be passed, and that the Senate is going to enter into this agreement to adjourn three days at a time until August 24. If on Monday the Senate has not carried out that understanding, if something interferes to prevent it, if the wire-control bill is not passed, if the Agricultural bill is not passed, this agreement or understanding between Members is null and void.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Do I understand the situation to be that if the House remained here and passed the water-power bill by reason of the fact that the Senate has recessed there would be no place to send the bill for conference?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from North Carolina desires to have gentlemen express their views now or forever hold their peace on this matter of recessing. Personally I am so situated by reason of having important office and departmental work to attend to that I can not leave the city in case of a recess. It is necessary for me to remain here. Therefore, as far as I am personally concerned, I should be just as content if the House continued its sessions, and I believe there is legislation—the water-power bill and other bills—that the House might properly and advantageously consider at this time. There is the Unanimous Consent Calendar that ought to be disposed of, or at least ought to be taken up. There is the Private Calendar that ought to have consideration. The oil-leasing bill is in conference and should be given consideration. There are a number of bills of importance which we could properly dispose of or pass upon at this time. But it is known of us all that for the past two weeks or more the majority of Members on each side have believed that the public business would not suffer if they went home for a short time.

If the House should recess three days at a time for some weeks or take a recess for a month, many gentlemen on both sides believe that in the long run we shall be as far along with legislation as if we attempt to remain here and legislate continuously during the hot summer days, considerable of the time, perhaps, without a quorum. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] tried some days ago in good faith to bring about the sort of arrangement which he believed a majority of the Members favored, but he was unable to consummate that arrangement.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I recollect the transaction.

Mr. MONDELL. He now makes another suggestion along the same line. The parties are pretty evenly divided here; but, after all, the responsibility is upon the Democratic side of the House. Personally, as one member of the minority, if the majority of the gentlemen upon that side desire the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], I am of the opinion that the minority should not interpose an objection, provided the Agricultural bill and the wire-control legislation are previously disposed of, and provided that we know it shall not be said after the arrangement has been made that we have neglected the public business in the opinion of those high in authority. The gentleman has stated that the President has expressed the opinion that the public business would not suffer if Congress shall remain in recess for a time. If that is true, and that is understood, and these bills I have mentioned are disposed of, it is my opinion that the minority should not object to the arrangement proposed.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, of course the statement of the gentleman may be very adroit, but I doubt whether it is right or fair for him or for Members upon the Republican side who desire a three-day gentleman's agreement to very shrewdly and keenly try to throw the responsibility all upon the Democratic side. I shall make no such request, and I shall withdraw it if it is not perfectly agreeable to gentlemen upon both sides, with the understanding that every individual Member in the House shall take his responsibility for it. [Applause.] I have no interest, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], any more than he has in the matter. I shall stay here and work, as the gentleman says he will. I think that the legislation is such that we will facilitate the passage of all legislation during this session and expedite it by such a gentleman's agreement as I have proposed. The Senate has taken that view of it. Whatever legislation we might pass would not effect anything, because the Senate is not in session during this time, and so far as the Unanimous-Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar are concerned, we will have a month or two months in which to dispose of all of this other legislation that might come up after we pass the revenue bill, and during which time the Senate is considering it. I think the gentleman ought to say that in saying what he did he was speaking jocularly and did not mean it.

Mr. MONDELL. No. I am sure the gentleman from North Carolina will agree with me that responsibility——

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think the gentleman ought to say that. This is a matter of making a gentleman's agreement, and it ought not to be monopolized by either side. I think one side is just as gentlemanly as the other, and yet the gentleman from Wyoming wants us to undertake the responsibility and his side to take no part of it.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, each and every one of us who agrees to this——

Mr. KITCHIN. If we are going to have a gentleman's agreement let us all take the responsibility for it upon both sides. If any man objects upon either side with this understanding which I have outlined——

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have already stated to the gentleman that I understood that he was making a suggestion, and that if he asked unanimous consent at this time I should object. The Senate ought to act first.

Mr. KITCHIN. But this agreement is based upon the action of the Senate and will be absolutely null and void unless the Senate acts as I have outlined.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I shall object for the present.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman what the parliamentary situation would be in connection with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]? Suppose the gentleman from Mississippi should object and remain here, and we should not enter into this agreement, and that the gentleman from North Carolina should take the responsibility on Monday of moving to adjourn until Thursday, and on Thursday of moving to adjourn until the following Monday, and so on, what would the gentleman from Mississippi accomplish while he is here and while the Senate is gone for six weeks?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman from Texas will permit, I am not as good a parliamentarian as the gentleman from Mississippi, and I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi to answer. Of course, we might adjourn every third day.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Here is the situation as I see it. The Senate has the wire bill. It is not yet passed. The Senate several times has gone back on things they stated they were going to do. It will not affect anything nor anybody for us to stay here and see what the Senate is going to do before we take any action.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from North Carolina has stated to the House repeatedly that this unanimous-consent agreement was requested and would be had upon the specific condition that the wire bill was to become a law—that is, to be signed by each of the presiding officers of the two Houses—and that the House shall pass the Agricultural bill before this agreement becomes effective; that is the condition precedent.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I have not stated to the gentleman I would object after the Senate acts, but I do object for the present to the proposition. I think we ought to wait until the Senate gets through.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the Senate is not through, then this agreement is null and void. I will say to the gentleman, if the Senate fails to pass the wire bill and if it fails to take action on entering into the unanimous-consent agreement for three-day adjournments until August 24, then the understanding here will be of no effect, and we will meet on Monday and meet regularly.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I shall object until the Senate takes action.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Mississippi object after it takes action?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It is not now necessary for me to state.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn; Mr. Speaker, if there is other business I will withdraw that motion.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ROBBINS was granted leave of absence Monday next on account of the funeral of Judge Doty, of Westmoreland County, Pa.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. What has become of the request preferred by the gentleman from North Carolina?

The SPEAKER. He never preferred any.

Mr. WALSH. I beg the Chair's pardon, he stated a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. He never addressed the Chair and preferred any request, however. This whole talk for the last hour has been out of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman from Mississippi object to? The gentleman from North Carolina preferred a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objected, he had no reason to object. He notified all concerned he would object.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina stated that if there was going to be any objection he would withdraw the request——

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference what the gentleman from North Carolina stated. He never made any request, unless the Chair has gone stone deaf.

Mr. WALSH. The Chair did not hear.

Mr. KITCHIN. I made the suggestion——

Mr. WALSH. Request.

Mr. KITCHIN. Practically a request to the membership of the House to enter into this agreement, but I did say that if any gentleman of the House objected and was not going to carry it out in good faith he ought to object then, and the gentleman from Mississippi objected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he is ready to proceed with the Agricultural bill?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, when I called the Committee on Agriculture to meet and consider this Agricultural appropriation bill this afternoon it was agreed among the committee that I should not call up for consideration that bill unless this agreement about which we have been talking for the last hour should be entered into, so I am not prepared to call up that bill at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum unless a motion to adjourn is made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12002. An act for the establishment of Bar Harbor, in the State of Maine, as a port of entry and delivery for the immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; and

H. R. 8839. An act for the establishment of Oswego, in the State of New York, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, July 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Atchafalaya River and Bayous Courtableau, Teche, and Vermilion, La., with a view to forming navigable connections between said streams, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests (H. Doc. No. 1230), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Ways and Means was discharged from the consideration of the bill (S. 110) for the relief of the Eldredge Bros. Live Stock Co., a corporation, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 12721) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 315) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to regulate wages and professional fees, the hours of labor in industries and occupations, and the price of commodities; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 12715) granting a pension to Mamie Russell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 12716) granting a pension to George W. Lambert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEATING: A bill (H. R. 12717) granting a pension to John C. McDowell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SNOOK: A bill (H. R. 12718) granting an increase of pension to Magdalina Klein; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WINSLOW: A bill (H. R. 12719) granting a pension to James A. Gaffney; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12720) granting a pension to Annie G. Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREW: Memorial of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, relative to appropriation for United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the American Federation of Labor, favoring passage of bill to establish a national conservatory of music and art; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of citizens of Berkeley, Cal., on behalf of the Armenian people of Russian Caucasus; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Mr. FARR: Petition of 20,000 Americans of Lithuanian descent, pledging their loyalty to our Government and expressing their hope and wish for independence of Lithuania; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Memorial of the school committee of the city of Providence, R. I., favoring universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Memorial of the school committee of Providence, R. I., favoring passage of bill for universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: Resolutions of the Business Men's Association of Cloverdale, and of the Ferndale Chamber of Commerce, of Ferndale, Cal., also of the people of Glendale, Oreg., all indorsing the system of military highways on the Pacific coast and urging action by Congress; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, letter of Mrs. Eli Rice, of Fort Bidwell, Cal., and resolution adopted by the union labels trade department of the American Federation of Labor, protesting against the zone system and urging its repeal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of the First Presbyterian Church of Newhall, Cal., favoring war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of Mrs. Calvin Young, of Mapleton, Minn., urging repeal of second-class postage provisions of the revenue law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 15, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, as we assemble this morning we hear the news has been flashed over the wires that the supreme moment has come in the conflict between truth and error, autocracy and freedom, and as a Nation bends its knee before Thy throne at this trying moment, when from thousands of churches ring out the bells calling the people to prayer, we unite our hearts with theirs, asking the God of nations, the God of truth and power, to make bare His arm to save. Strengthen our boys who stand against the fierce onslaught of our enemies. Give them safety and Thy protection. Give them victory under Thy divine blessing. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, July 11, 1918, when, on request of Mr. SHEPPARD and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 10852. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads;

H. R. 12099. An act to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 309. Joint resolution to authorize the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GORE rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I present resolutions adopted by Lithuanian residents of Pennsylvania in mass meetings assembled on the 4th of July, 1918, extending to the United States of America assurances of their unswerving allegiance to this Government and its loyal support. The resolutions will go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of sundry citizens of Wyoming, favoring the enactment of further prohibition legislation as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of North America, praying for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS (for Mr. LODGE) presented petitions of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

JOHN CHICK.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3985) for the relief of John Chick, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 551) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 4829) granting an increase of pension to Enoch Laudenslager; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE (for Mr. FERNALD):

A bill (S. 4830) granting an increase of pension to George W. Davis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, unless some one desires to introduce a concurrent or other resolution, I wish to ask leave, as a matter of personal explanation, to call attention to a statement made on Saturday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] in regard to the newspaper publication which I presented in the Senate. That newspaper publication was printed in the Washington Post, and stated that the circumstances which it related, being a defense of Germany against certain charges of cruelty, were given out as news by the War Department. The Senator from Nebraska seemed to question whether or not that was a reliable statement, whether or not it was given out by the War Department, and whether or not the opinion which I expressed that the agency by which it was given out by the War Department was the Publicity Committee of which Mr. Creel is chairman.

I refer to the RECORD of that date for the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska, without further specific reference to it, and in support of the position which I took at that time, that the presumption created by the publication of this item in the Washington Post, with the statement that it was given out by the War Department, was sufficient to be relied upon until the contrary was shown, and in the further statement I made that, in view of the general course of publications of the administration, it, in all probability, was published through the agency of Mr. Creel. I call attention to the publication known as the Official Bulletin, published in this city, of the date of July 11, 1918. At the head of it, on the front page, are the words "Published daily under order of the President of the United States by the Committee on Public Information, George Creel, chairman," and on the same front page is the same identical article which I quoted from the Washington Post. I submit that statement, the Official Bulletin being in the library and being open to reference by anyone who desires to look at it, in proof of all the statements and all the conclusions that I stated in the Senate in reference to that item.

In connection with the same matter, Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] at the conclusion of my remarks in the Senate in regard to the item which I have just referred to got out of his desk—I think he got it out of his desk—a newspaper publication which he seems to have kept there for some time for handy reference, and which I think we heard read in the Senate on other occasions, a very up-to-date argument in the speech made by Lucius Æmilius Paulus 168 B. C. The Senator from Florida read it with approval and apparently indorsed it, particularly the statement of Paulus—I never heard of him before, I am free to say; evidently he did not make any very great, lasting reputation in his lifetime out of his military expedition—inviting those who criticized him to go into Macedonia with him. The subject matter which is under discussion now, Mr. President, is whether or not we are to have an expedition into Russia, not how the expedition is to be conducted after it is launched. The quotation from Livy which the Senator from Florida read was quoted from the San Francisco Star, and my purpose in referring to it now is to say that a short time ago I read in that same San Francisco Star an editorial in which Count Von Bernstorff's privileges in this country were defended and in which the statement was made, in response to a suggestion that Von Bernstorff ought to have been treated as the criminal that he was and prosecuted for his crimes, that we could not do that because he was hedged around with the immunities and privileges of an ambassador from a foreign country, the position taken by the San Francisco Star being that an ambassador from a foreign country to the United States, and particularly Ambassador Von Bernstorff, could murder and burn through his agents, and commit the crimes which the evidence shows Count Von Bernstorff has been guilty of, with impunity because of his ambassadorial privileges. The same editorial in the same San Francisco Star contained an insolent boast that we would not have dared to punish Von Bernstorff for his crimes in this country, because Mr. Gerard was in Germany at the time and Germany would have retaliated upon him. That is the tone and policy of the newspaper that contained the article quoted by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I may say in this connection that it was the sentiments of the Roman consul that I was then indorsing, and not particularly the San Francisco Star. I simply gave that paper credit for having discovered the speech delivered by the Roman consul 168 B. C. The sentiment of the speech I thought was applicable to conditions today, and it was that, rather than expressions of the Star itself, that I desired to impress upon the Senate. The fact that it appeared in the Star I mentioned, because I think it proper when we see an article of that sort in any journal to give that journal whatever credit there may be for publishing the article. It is not original with the Star, I take it, but the Star unearthed the speech in some way. At any rate, it was the speech that I particularly desired to call attention to, and the sentiments in that speech, and I think they are applicable today as a general principle. That a pilot on shore can not very well direct a ship at sea is quite sound, as also, I think, the sentiment that those who want to direct the military operations ought to be on the ground and might be invited to proceed to Macedonia, along with the commanders, in order to get full information. I do not know that the authority commended itself to the Senator, but I think it is a very admirable address. I will say generally, with reference to the Senator's expression, I was out of the Chamber at the time of the debate regarding the Russian situation. I read his speech since in the RECORD, and I find myself quite in accord with his view concerning the Bolsheviki.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am sincerely glad to know that a prominent Senator, like the Senator from Florida, on the majority side, entertains those views; and I hope and believe that his position will have some effect upon the policy of the Government. Of course, the particular matter in the Star is not of great importance, but the general issue which seems to be suggested by the presentation of it, that one should not criticize the administration, is an issue of considerable importance. My purpose in referring to it was to suggest to anyone who is interested in the matter at all and give him what information I had as to the character and general policy of the paper, and to emphasize the particular point that the position which the paper, by inference at least, takes, that the administration is not to be criticized, that no suggestions are to be made as to the policies of government by anybody except, presumably, the President, is a position taken by a paper that defends the immunity of Von Bernstorff and insolently boasts that he can commit the crimes of which he was guilty in this country without punishment. I think it throws some light upon the motive back of the paper.

FIGHT BETWEEN THE "MONITOR" AND THE "MERRIMAC."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in the midst of this great war, when our Navy Department has been bending all its energies to circumvent the submarine, I think it is appropriate to call attention to one of the most momentous events of the Civil War in connection with the operations of our Navy.

JOHN ERICSSON.

One of the most far-reaching and momentous events of the Civil War was the battle in Hampton Roads March 9, 1862, between the Monitor and the Merrimac. When that occurred the war had been dragging, on land and sea, for nearly a year with scant success for the cause of the Union. To obtain and hold the mastery of the sea had become all important for the success of our arms. To maintain a blockade of the ports of the South and to keep the ports of the North open was vital, and became the great task of our Navy.

For this task the North had a small fleet of wooden ships, some of sail and some of steam. The best of these were our four steam frigates, the Merrimac, the Wabash, the Roanoke, and the Minnesota, all of the same class and each of 3,500 tons burden, and 40 guns.

The South had no fleet at the opening of the war, but proceeded to make up for this deficiency by embarking, in a limited way, upon the construction of ironclads of various types and designs.

In the spring of 1861 the Union forces were obliged to vacate and abandon the Norfolk Navy Yard, where the Merrimac was undergoing repairs. When the yard was abandoned she was scuttled and set on fire, but only partially burned. The Confederates, during 1861 and the early part of 1862, raised, repaired, and converted her into a powerful and formidable ironclad. In the meantime, in August, 1861, Congress had directed the Secretary of the Navy to take steps for the construction of ironclads.

At this juncture John Ericsson came to our relief by furnishing plans and specifications for the construction of his noted ironclad, the Monitor, and offering to construct and complete the same within less than four months.

At first he met with a chilling and unfriendly reception in the Navy Department, but finally a few patriotic and public-spirited men came to his relief, and through their intervention his plan was adopted, and a contract was made with him and his friends for the construction and completion of the Monitor within 100 days after the contract was let, with the unusual and drastic condition, however, that if the vessel failed to accomplish all that was expected of it the cost of construction was to be borne by Ericsson and his friends.

Those 100 days were days of great trial for Ericsson. He not only had to study out and prepare from day to day the specifications and detailed working drawings and supervise the work, all of which kept him busy and under constant tension early and late, but he had also to bear the nagging and criticism of unfriendly or doubting officials of the Navy Department, who, from week to week, in one form or another, were admonishing him and criticizing his work.

However, in spite of all obstacles and drawbacks, the Monitor was completed nearly on time and turned over to the Government, after a trial trip, on the 19th of February, 1862.

After being duly equipped, officered, and manned, on the 6th of March, 1862, she left New York for Hampton Roads, where she arrived, after a stormy and tempestuous passage, late on the evening of the 8th of March, anchoring first by the side of the Roanoke and later by the side of the Minnesota, where she nestled until early the next morning.

The Monitor arrived none too soon; in fact, she came at a time when our entire fleet in Hampton Roads was threatened with complete destruction.

There seems to have been, as it were, a veritable race in construction between the builders of the Merrimac and the Monitor, with ampler time in favor of the Merrimac.

The Merrimac appeared on the momentous scene of action one day sooner. Early on the 8th day of March, 1862, she boldly and defiantly steamed out of the navy yard at Norfolk and proceeded on her raid of havoc and destruction.

There were at that time in Hampton Roads 16 of our war vessels of all classes, mounting 298 guns. Of these the most important were the Roanoke, the Minnesota, the Cumberland, and the Congress—all wooden ships, and one of them, the Congress, without steam power. On that fated day the Merrimac destroyed and sank the Cumberland and Congress and disabled the Minnesota, and then, as if wearied of her day's work and feeling certain of her prey—the remnant of our fleet—on the morrow, returned in the afternoon to her lair in the Norfolk Navy Yard to prepare for the raid of the next day.

The cause of the Union was at this time at its lowest ebb. Another day's work of the Merrimac such as that of the 8th of March would have destroyed the remnant of the fleet in Hampton Roads, and Washington, Baltimore, New York, and Boston, and our other cities, would have been at her mercy. Our merchant marine would have been driven from the sea and McClellan's army could never have found a safe retreat on the banks of the James River after its defeat in the Peninsular campaign.

It was in the midst of this gloom, when our cause seemed well-nigh hopeless, that the spirit of John Ericsson, embodied in the Monitor, came to our relief. It seemed an act of Providence that had found its expression in the soul and brain of the great inventor, who had zealously, for months, day and night, labored at his task with a faith that was boundless and harbored no doubt. Quietly and modestly the Monitor, after a trying and stormy passage, anchored late that night of the 8th of March in the shadow of the disabled Minnesota, ready for its task of the morrow. Her officers and crew, with knowledge of what had befallen the Cumberland and Congress, realized fully that the fate of our country was in their hands, but there was no hesitation and no doubt on their part.

Early on the morrow the Merrimac, the pride of the Confederacy, with three consorts, boldly and confident of an easy victory, steamed into Hampton Roads, making straight for the Minnesota. She expected as speedy and as easy a victory as that of the day before. But soon a small speck, as it were—the Monitor—emerged from the shadow of the Minnesota and boldly approached the iron leviathan. The latter paused for a moment and cast a suspicious glance at her Lilliputian adversary and then advanced to the attack, and one of the most noted battles of the ages began. I will not weary you with any details of the intense struggle. The Merrimac soon found that she was not encountering a Minnesota, a Cumberland, or a Congress, but that she was confronted with a most dangerous and formidable adversary. It was once more a Goliath pitted against a David, and David, as of old, was entirely victorious. The Monitor continued to ride triumphant in Hampton Roads while the Merrimac, limping and disabled, slowly steamed back to the navy yard at Norfolk, where she could vex us no more and where she soon met the fate of a suicide.

It was a most glorious and momentous victory. It saved McClellan's army and the remnant of our fleet. It gave permanent immunity to the harbors of the North and enabled us to maintain an effective and nearly complete blockade of the ports of the South.

It had a restraining influence on the statesmen of other countries, who were eager to recognize the independence of the Southern Confederacy. And it entirely revolutionized naval warfare, and rendered the proud wooden fleets of the great naval powers obsolete and worthless.

That great son of Sweden and the adopted son of America, John Ericsson, had, without the blare of trumpets and in the midst of many difficulties, wrought this great miracle for our relief. He had placed the hammer of Thor in our hands at the most critical period of the struggle for the preservation of the Union.

Sweden has, from first to last, contributed many of her best sons and daughters to America for its growth and development, who have constituted and continue to constitute one of the best elements of our heterogeneous ethnic make-up. But the greatest contribution Sweden ever made was when she gave us John Ericsson, one of the noblest, greatest, and bravest of all her sons. Oh, that he were still young and with us to-day, as in the days of the Monitor! If he were, I feel confident that he would furnish us an antidote against the submarine as effective as the antidote he furnished us against the Merrimac.

He rendered many other important services to our Government during the Civil War in addition to that of the Monitor. And he was often annoyed, hampered, and harassed by the bureaucratic officers of the Government when rendering such services. But his anxiety for our success, his intense patriotism, and his loyalty to our country were so paramount with him that, regardless of these slights and rebuffs, he persisted in giving all that was in him, his soul and his whole heart, to the welfare and salvation of our country.

And this lesson of loyalty and patriotism he has left as a precious legacy to us and to our children. May that spirit of patriotism and loyalty which was his during the dreary days of the Civil War be ours in full measure during the pending war. Let us all have America and her cause uppermost and foremost in our love and affection, in war as well as in peace.

While the remains of John Ericsson have found their final resting place in his beloved Värmland—the land that bore him and cradled him—yet he seems as near and dear to us to-day, in spirit at least, as in those somber and trying times of '61–62, when he came to the relief of our country in the hour of her great distress.

When can his glory fade?
Oh! the brave charge he made;
All the world wondered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I had desired on Saturday last to submit a few observations on the President's veto message in respect to the Agricultural appropriation bill. I was not willing, however, at that time to obstruct or to delay the immediate consideration and passage of the telegraph and telephone measure which was then pending.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the morning business been closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business has been closed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I regret to say——

Mr. GORE. I was on my feet——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think that prevails against a point of order.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from Connecticut is right about that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that immediately upon the closing of routine morning business the Senate shall adjourn. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator from Oklahoma, and I should not do so except that a precedent might be created which would hereafter be embarrassing.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is correct, unless the fact that I had risen to address the Chair and did not succeed may be considered to alter the circumstances.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Chair wants to rule that he closed morning business too quickly and did not know the Senator was addressing the Chair, I have no objection; but I do not want to have it established that after morning business has been closed the Senate can continue in session.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from Connecticut is right about that, and I remit the question to the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask unanimous consent that the order made by the President pro tempore as to the closing of morning business be set aside in order that the Senator from Oklahoma may proceed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. One unanimous-consent agreement can not change another, Mr. President; and I should much prefer that the President pro tempore should change his ruling.

Mr. GORE. I doubt if that could be done, although I appreciate the kindness of the Senator from California; but unless the Chair should recall his ruling in view of the fact that I had risen——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be very glad, if he thought he properly could do so, to recall his statement that morning business had closed; but the Chair stated, "If there be no further morning business," expecting any Senator who desired the floor to rise, but no Senator did until the morning business was declared closed. The Chair, of course, regrets it.

Mr. GORE. I had risen to address the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Oklahoma desired to address the Chair, for he was compelled to step out of the Chamber a moment ago and sent word to me not to let the morning business close until he came back, because he desired to submit some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observed that the Senator from Oklahoma intended to address the Chair when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was recognized, but before declaring that morning business was closed the Chair looked toward the Senator from Oklahoma to see if he desired recognition, and did not declare the morning business closed until after asking whether there was any further morning business.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Chair is perfectly correct in his statement; but many times after such an announcement has been made and it subsequently appeared that a Senator was on his feet and desired to speak the announcement has been recalled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma was not on his feet at the time the inquiry was made or until morning business was declared closed.

Mr. GORE. I think I was, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is mistaken, because the Chair indicated a desire to know whether the Senator from Oklahoma desired to address the Chair and looked toward his seat.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think the Chair is right about that. I understood, however, that the Senator from Oklahoma was going to try to get the floor at the time the Senator from Minnesota was recognized; but we know the infirmity of the Senator from Oklahoma. When the Senator from Minnesota closed, I was expecting the Senator from Oklahoma to address the Chair, but, of course, he could not know that the Senator from Minnesota had really ceased talking, for there might merely have been a pause in his remarks. Under those circumstances the Chair could well say that while he did announce—the Chair is right about that—"morning business is closed," and prefaced that announcement with the remark that he said he did, if the Senator from Oklahoma says—and we all know such to be the case—that he was trying to get recognition and was seeking recognition before morning business was closed, it seems to me that the Chair could very well say that he made the announcement a little too soon.

Mr. GORE. I will say in that connection that I had a page report to me when the Senator from Minnesota was about finishing his speech, and he reported that the Senator from Minnesota was on the last page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that he can not be responsible for not strictly carrying out a unanimous-consent agreement. The Senator from Connecticut can withdraw the point of order that the Senator from Oklahoma is out of order, and the Chair then will not call attention to the fact that an adjournment is required. That is the only condition the Chair thinks that is appropriate to the occasion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I withdraw the point of order, if I may, but I do not want the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma is allowed to proceed to constitute a precedent for the construction of the unanimous-consent agreement in any other respect than the Chair has just announced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Connecticut withdrawing the point of order, which the Chair has not yet ruled upon? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I appreciate the importance of adhering to the unanimous-consent agreement, and I am sorry to throw myself upon the grace of the Senate in this fashion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma.

PRICE OF WHEAT—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. GORE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for 20 minutes,

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I simply wish to inquire if the routine morning business has been closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). It has.

Mr. ASHURST. I make the point of order that nothing is in order but an adjournment under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state that the President pro tempore of the Senate when in the Chair at one time announced that the morning business had closed, but withdrew his ruling because the Senator from Oklahoma had been endeavoring to get the attention of the Chair. So the present condition is that the morning business has not been closed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will allow me, I do not think the Senator is stating the situation quite correctly. I made the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement, the morning business having been closed, there was nothing to do but for the Senate to adjourn, and I thought it was the duty of the Chair under the unanimous-consent agreement to declare the Senate adjourned the minute he declared that the routine morning business was closed. But upon explanation that the Senator from Oklahoma had attempted to address the Chair before the morning business had closed I withdrew the point of order. The Chair therefore made no ruling on the question, but at any time when the point of order is renewed if the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken and there is no appeal from that ruling, in my opinion it is the duty of the Chair to declare the Senate adjourned under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. THOMAS. May I suggest, Mr. President, while it is not at all binding upon the Senate, the fact is that the Senator from Oklahoma intended to address the Senate on Saturday upon the resolution then before the body. He consented to postpone his address until this morning that we might obtain a final vote before adjournment, with a tacit understanding on the part of some Senators that he would have full privilege to speak to-day. While it is true that is not binding upon the Senate, I think it is fair and only fair to the Senator from Oklahoma that that understanding should be regarded at least by those of us who were aware of it on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, since I made the point of order I wish to say that on Saturday I most reluctantly consented to the unanimous-consent agreement. In conscience and in honor, as it is violated now before the ink is dry, if proceedings of this character in open and flagrant violation of the unanimous-consent agreement are to be carried on, I shall consider myself absolved from it, for you are violating it before the ink is dry, and I shall call for a quorum.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, of course if any one Senator feels as the Senator from Arizona has expressed himself, I defer to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to hear the address of the Senator from Oklahoma, because he is my particular friend, and I feel more at liberty to make a point of order when my friend is violating the agreement than when one who is not so friendly is doing so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not yield. We ought not to make an agreement, after begging and imploring Senators for hours not to object, and then come in on Monday and violate the agreement we make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist upon his point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I do insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order and declares the Senate adjourned until next Thursday.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 15, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Incline Thine ear, O God, our Heavenly Father, and hear our petition. Inspire us with great thoughts, high ideals, and noble endeavors, that we may meet the changing conditions of life and build for ourselves a character which shall stand the tests which confront us, and leave behind us a record worthy of the gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us, after the similitude of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 13, 1918, was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to say that if the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. AUSTIN, had been here he would have voted for $2.50 wheat. I was requested to make that statement by a lady who said that she was his clerk. And he would have voted for $2.40 wheat also if it had come to that.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 300. Joint resolution to authorize the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor;

H. R. 12099. An act to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10852. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10852) to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

S. 4194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4722. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4543. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 309) to authorize the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the war. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, they will be your own remarks?

Mr. OSBORNE. Entirely; except some quotations from the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WOMEN REGISTRANTS AT AMARILLO, TEX.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read in my time an Associated Press dispatch clipping, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the dispatch about?

Mr. JONES. I am just having it read in my time. I have gotten consent.

Mr. WALSH. You have gotten the time, but you have not gotten the consent to have it read.

Mr. JONES. It is just calling attention to the fact that there are more women registrants in my home town than men registrants.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WOMAN VOTERS IN MAJORITY—OUTNUMBER IN DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY JULY 27 AT AMARILLO, TEX.

AMARILLO, TEX., July 13.

More women than men will be entitled to vote here July 27 in the Democratic primary, it developed to-day, when the registration of women was completed.

A total of 2,112 women registered, as against 2,072 men, who registered last January.

Women in Texas may vote in the primaries under a restricted-suffrage act passed at the last session of the legislature.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a patriotic address made by Frederic C. Shafer, of Fort Rock, Oreg.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object; he is not a Member or an official of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD remarks covering appropriations and expenditures for the last fiscal year and for the coming fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave to print in the RECORD a statement of appropriations and expenditures for the last fiscal year and for the next fiscal year. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Spanish-American War widows' pension bill which recently passed the House, and in connection therewith to print correspondence between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VAN DYKE], the national patriotic instructor of the order of Spanish War Veterans, and the governors of some of the States and others.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the Spanish War widows' pensions and also correspondence carried on by Congressman VAN DYKE, of Minnesota, with certain governors on the same subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of loyalty.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of loyalty. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. NELSON. My own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the telegraph and telephone bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the telegraph and telephone bill. Is there objection?

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is objection to the gentleman from Maryland extending his remarks on the telegraph and telephone bill.

Mr. WALSH. I object, and shall object to all extension of remarks hereafter in view of the gentleman calling for the regular order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement that——

Mr. WALSH. I object.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 4723, an omnibus pension bill, with Senate amendments. This will be the last of the pension bills reported from the House Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 4723, from the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have a letter from the father of a boy who was killed on the battle field of France, in which he seriously complains because of an attempt made by an attorney here in Washington to charge him a commission for the collection of the back pay that is due his son from the Government. I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes, as I consider this matter of vital interest to the entire country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a young soldier by the name of Alexander P. Garrett, son of A. R. Garrett, a prominent citizen of Mangum, Okla., was killed on the battle field of France a few days ago. This young man was a patriot. He not only volunteered his services for the country but he made a sacrifice by taking a portion of his salary each month and investing it in liberty bonds. According to the statements made in the letter which has been sent me by the young man's father, there are certain attorneys here in Washington who seek to make contracts with the parents of those who have lost their lives, when they must know that the department does not countenance such action, and that whenever the proper proofs are filed no difficulty will be encountered in collecting all that is due in cases of this kind. It is for this reason that I have brought this matter to the attention of the House.

When the information came to Judge Garrett that his son had been killed on the battle field of France a blank was sent him by the War Department to be filled out in making the proper claim for the back pay due the soldier and the amount he had advanced on liberty bonds. He filled out this blank and returned it. He makes the statement in his letter to me that instead of receiving the pay that should have been sent him, an attorney here in Washington sent him a contract asking that he pay 20 per cent commission before the money is received.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have read in my time the letter in this connection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

MANGUM, OKLA., July 9, 1918.

Hon. JIM MCCLINTIC.
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith a paper which explains itself. In so far as any back pay or claim of any kind, money due my son, Alexander P. Garrett, for his services and fighting for his country and world democracy, I do not care for the money individually. You will see from the inclosed copy of the paper that I am sending you that it appears that beneficiaries who are entitled to receive any money for services rendered by their sons must employ an attorney to secure the same.

In a circular letter from the Treasury Department some time ago it was declared that no attorney was necessary to collect any moneys due a soldier who had been killed and who had advanced money to buy liberty bonds or had any back pay coming to him. But, from the inclosed document, I take it that some one in the department is helping or aiding Edward J. Redmond to fleece beneficiaries. I am loyal to my Government, but I am not loyal to graft. And if it is a fact that it is necessary to employ an attorney to obtain any money due beneficiaries it certainly is not in harmony with the great principles for which my son died on the battle field of France.

I trust that you will take sufficient interest in this matter, not on my personal account, but in behalf of every father and mother who has and who will lose sons in this great struggle, to investigate and see if it is an actual fact that it is necessary that an attorney be employed to secure any money, by reason of the death of their sons, from the Treasury Department of the United States.

I would be glad to hear from you concerning this matter. Several days ago, long enough to have a remittance from the Treasury Department, I filled out the blanks sent me and had the necessary witnesses as to identity to collect some claim for services of my son and also money that he had advanced on liberty bonds, as per instructions, and instead of a remittance I have received the inclosed instrument, of which I am sending you a copy, as above stated.

Yours, very truly, A. R. GARRETT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McCLINTIC. In just a minute. If I can have my time extended just a few minutes, I wish to send up to the desk the contract that was sent to Judge Garrett.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read, without objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

May 27.

(This claim in no way relates to war-risk insurance or compensation.)

DECLARATION.

I, ——— of ——— ———, the ——— and next of kin of Alexander P. Garrett, who served as a private in the United States Army, hereby make claim to recover all pay and allowances due on account of his services as aforesaid.

I appoint Edward J. Redmond, of Washington, D. C., my attorney to prosecute this claim, and direct that the warrant drawn in payment of the same be sent me by the department to the address given below.

Witness my hand this day of ———, of ———, 1918.

FEE AGREEMENT.

Whereas the undersigned having made claim for pay and allowances on account of the services of aforesaid soldier, through Edward J. Redmond:

Now this agreement witnesseth: That for and in consideration of services done and to be done in the premises, I hereby agree to allow my attorney, Edward J. Redmond, of Washington, D. C., a fee equal to 20 per cent of the amount allowed me by the United States, which shall include all amounts to be paid for any services in the furtherance of said claim, and no fee shall be demanded by or payable to said attorney, in whole or part, except in case of the allowance of said claim, when I agree to remit to him upon receipt of the check in payment of the claim, 20 per cent of the amount of said check; and it is further understood that I shall not be liable for any costs or expenses whatever in the prosecution of said claim; and it is further understood that this agreement in no way relates to claims for war-risk insurance or compensation.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I promised first to yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that the paper just read was mailed from the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The statement made in Judge Garrett's letter was that he received an application blank from the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and that with this was a circular letter stating it would not be necessary to employ the services of an attorney. He filled out the blank and returned it to the department, and instead of receiving the money due him he received a letter from this attorney containing a contract calling for a commission of 20 per cent where a collection was made of any kind, with the exception of the Bureau of War -Risk Insurance. Mr.

Speaker, there are a great many dependent parents throughout the Nation who have patriotic sons who are willing to make sacrifices for the rights of the American people. Some of these parents are not very well informed as to the rules and regulations that govern the collection of money from the various departments of our Government, and it is too bad that there are those who have no regard for humanity, but on the other hand are eager of the opportunity to filch them out of money that they have no right to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Treasury sent out a circular letter, a printed letter, distributed throughout the country, of which you and anyone can get copies now, warning these people that they ought not to employ an attorney, saying that it will not cost them a cent, and that the War-Risk Insurance Bureau will attend to it? The inference the gentleman conveys there is undoubtedly that the War-Risk Insurance Bureau is assisting some attorney, whoever this man may be, in getting the information, so that he may write to them. If that is the case——

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman is in error. The statement does not refer to the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, but on the other hand it refers to back pay due the soldier and the amount advanced by him for the purchase of liberty bonds. Consequently it goes to a different department.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will yield further, if that is the case, there is no punishment too great that can be inflicted on the men in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau who are bringing this about, but I do not believe it. The gentleman ought to follow up his facts and put the facts in the RECORD at the first opportunity.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if, since he has received the letter from the father of the young man, he has consulted with any officials of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The letter was received by me yesterday, and I have not had time to do so. I thought I would bring it to the attention of the House, because we would probably recess to-day. This was my first opportunity to bring it to the attention of this body.

Mr. TREADWAY. The first thing I want to state is that it is easy for these attorneys to secure the lists of these casualties without consulting the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and the second is that we have passed legislation within a short time, within two or three weeks, covering this very point, making it a criminal offense to send out such a circular letter as that. I would suggest to the gentleman, if I may be pardoned in following up the question I interjected, that he take up the matter with the War-Risk Insurance Bureau in reference to this circular letter. They are just as much interested, I take it, as we are, and——

Mr. McCLINTIC. There are many parents who have sons in the Army, and when they receive statements of this kind from attorneys they feel that they ought to employ them. I want to say that it is not necessary for them to enter into a contract with the War Department in order to collect back pay which is due one of their sons if he should be killed. I hope this incident can be brought to the attention of the entire country, so that no attorney can defraud the parents of any of our brave soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I would like to have a minute.

Mr. COX. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. QUIN. I would like to know what has become of my minute. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. QUIN. I say I would like to know what is the matter with my minute request.

The SPEAKER. Somebody objected. The regular order was demanded. The regular order was, Could the gentleman from Mississippi have one minute? Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

Mr. HAMLIN. Not on that, but the request of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Two gentlemen can not speak at once. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] was speaking about a very serious matter, and I think that what he has said may leave the implication unintentionally by his remarks that the War-Risk Insurance Bureau would countenance this kind of conduct on the part of these dirty buzzards endeavoring to prey upon the unfortunate people who have a soldier son who has gone forth and died in battle. [Applause.] I think, and I know, in fact, that the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and every other branch of this Government has put the seal of condemnation on these inhuman pirates, and no part of this Government would countenance such conduct on the part of shysters as the gentleman from Oklahoma has related here; and if it happens that there be any people who fall into the pitfalls of these human vultures it is their misfortune. As the gentleman across the aisle [Mr. TREADWAY] stated, we have already enacted a law to prevent that. [Applause.]

No lawyer should be allowed to get one cent of the soldier's back pay or Government insurance as a fee for collecting it. No soldier nor the parents of a soldier or sailor need the aid of a lawyer to get this money.

The War-Risk Bureau will pay every dime that is due any soldier and it will pay every dime due the beneficiary under the policy.

Every Congressman will aid his constituents in collecting the money.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I am not going to object—I also want five minutes on a kindred matter.

The SPEAKER. Let us attend to one thing to a time. Is there objection to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] having five minutes?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes when the gentleman from Minnesota has concluded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES LIABLE TO MILITARY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The other day the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] propounded a question to the Chair that he could not then answer, but he now has the information. The gentleman from Tennessee wanted to know how many reports from the executive departments relative to applications for exemption of departmental employees have been handed in. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that all of the inquiries have been answered except those addressed to the Post Office Department, the Department of Agriculture, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Food Administration, and the Fuel Administration.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the immediate inquiry which I made was whether all had answered, and the reason I made that inquiry was that I thought we ought to take some steps to dispose of them; that is, that there ought to be a reference to a committee. I am not interested in their answering except as they are able to answer. Of course, they must answer in time, but I simply wanted to explain that that was the only purpose of my inquiry. To be frank about it, I thought they had all answered, and I intended to make a motion to refer them, because by agreement they are held on the Speaker's table until all the replies come in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that, as we may adjourn to-day, he had better make his motion, at some time to-day, to include all those that have come in as well as those that come in hereafter.

EAST ST. LOUIS RIOTS (H. DOC. NO. 1231).

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, no provision has yet been made for publishing the report of the committee to investigate the East St. Louis riots. There is great demand for this report, and the committee has money left out of the appropriation that was made to defray its expenses. I have learned that 5,000 copies of that report can be printed for about $80. Is it permissible for the committee to have that printing done?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better ask unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] volunteers the information that it is permissible for the committee to have the printing done.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that authority was given to the committee to have such printing and binding done out of the appropriation as the committee might deem proper.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have 5,000 copies of the report printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have 5,000 copies of the report on the East St. Louis riots printed——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. For the use of the committee.

The SPEAKER. For the use of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. To be paid for out of the amount appropriated for the committee?

The SPEAKER. To be paid for out of the appropriation made for the expenses of that committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BACK PAY OF SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a letter from State Senator George H. Gardner, of Brainerd, Minn., an attorney at that place, which I desire to read:

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
Senate Chamber, July 8, 1918.

Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR HAROLD: Gunnard Erickson, late private, Company F, Eighteenth Infantry, at the time of his death in France had coming to him about $200 of back pay. He was also insured and his brother, Charlie Erickson, 1720 Maple Street, SE., Brainerd, Minn., is the beneficiary under the policy. The policy is for $10,000.

I am writing to find out if there isn't some way that Charlie Erickson, with whom Gunnard Erickson has always made his home, and whom he must have thought a good deal of when he left him the insurance, can get this back pay of $200 that Gunnard had coming?

A short time ago I wrote to the Director Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, Treasury Department, in regard to the matter, but I have not as yet heard from them, but to-day Charlie Erickson, brother of Gunnard Erickson, came into the office and showed me a letter, which I have before me, from the law firm of Redmond & Redmond, McGill Building, Washington, D. C., inclosing a "fee agreement" to the effect that they would get 20 per cent for collecting this back pay of Gunnard Erickson.

Now, I am wondering how the information got to this law firm relative to the claim of Gunnard Erickson and how this leak came about? It seems to me that the officials of the War-Risk Insurance Department are in big business informing certain attorneys in Washington of certain claims of back wages for soldiers.

Charlie Erickson, relative, is entitled to Gunnard Erickson's back wages, and it should not be necessary for him to be called upon to put up money to some Washington attorney to prosecute this claim.

If you will kindly take this matter up and find out if Charlie Erickson can not get the back wages without the intervention of attorneys and officials in Washington working in cahoots and making a divy on the proposition, I will appreciate it very much.

Very truly, yours, GEORGE H. GARDNER.

Here we have a case of a beneficiary writing to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance with reference to the back pay due a soldier who has been killed on the battle fields of France. Instead of hearing from the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance the beneficiary receives a letter from a firm of Washington attorneys who very generously offer to collect the back pay due the deceased soldier for 20 per cent commission. I do not want anything that I may say to be taken as a reflection upon the bureau as an organization, for I feel that it is doing a great work. If there has been any improper conduct I am sure that it has been on the part of some subordinate employee.

Knowing that the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance would not have anything to do with the matter of back pay, I went down to the War Department this morning and conferred with Adjt. Gen. McCain. Gen. McCain stated that this was probably the result of publishing addresses with casualties. Whether or not that be true I do not know, but I would like to know how the firm of Redmond & Redmond ascertained that this man Erickson had $200 back pay coming to him from the Government. It surely looks as though some subordinate in the bureau is leaking and probably on a 50-50 basis.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is of the opinion that Gen. McCain's explanation did not explain?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not think it explains this particular case.

Mr. MONDELL. And that as a matter of fact the publication of the casualties with the addresses of the soldiers could not have informed these people with regard to this particular claim?

Mr. KNUTSON. Hardly in regard to this particular claim.

Mr. MONDELL. And that there must have been a leak in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance?

Mr. KNUTSON. It appears to me that that must be so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman says this is a question of back pay?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance has nothing whatever to do with the arrears of pay of soldiers?

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely nothing. I agree to that. But the gentleman will also admit that the leak must have come from the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, because the matter was by mistake taken up with that bureau, and it is on all fours with the case presented by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, every soldier who dies is entitled to some back pay.

Mr. KNUTSON. How did they know that the amount was $200?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not say that. That would seem to indicate that somebody had given some information.

Mr. KNUTSON. Exactly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But I do not think it is fair to say that the leak was in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was going to make the same suggestion, that if the War-Risk Insurance Bureau has no jurisdiction of these matters, how is it that this case and the other case referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] have both by mistake been referred to that bureau?

Mr. KNUTSON. Many persons back home are of the opinion that all these matters must be taken up with the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. It was merely a mistake in reference.

Mr. LANGLEY. I undestand, but I do not think the gentleman ought to leave such a strong inference about the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, when there are other ways in which they might obtain such information.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman advance any better theory?

Mr. LANGLEY. No, I can not; but I do not think it is fair to make that strong inferential charge against the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. I do not want to see anyone accused unjustly in this public way unless there is stronger proof than has thus far been presented.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is needlessly concerned about the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I am not. I simply wish everybody to have fair treatment.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BARNHART. I did not get the full statement that the gentleman made relative to the amount of back pay that was due.

Mr. KNUTSON. Two hundred dollars.

Mr. BARNHART. Did the attorney's letter state that?

Mr. KNUTSON. It says that they inclosed an agreement to the effect that they would get 20 per cent for collecting the back pay.

Mr. BARNHART. But it does not say that the amount is $200.

Mr. MONDELL. The letter was not received from the attorneys until the application had been made to the War-Risk Bureau, was it?

Mr. KNUTSON. No. The only reply that they received from the communication they sent to the War-Risk Bureau was from Redmond & Redmond.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did Redmond & Redmond say that they were replying to the communication addressed to the War-Risk Bureau?

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not such fools as that.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman knows better than to ask that question. I will say that these birds of prey do not put all of their cards on the table face up.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to admit that. But the gentleman does not mean to make the statement that the letter of Redmond & Redmond was a direct reply to the letter sent to the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not so stated in terms.

Mr. KNUTSON. No.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. My question was not prompted by any desire to cover up anything that is wrong in these bureaus, but if the letter on its face shows that it is a reply to the letter written to the War-Risk Bureau, we ought to know it. That would be direct evidence that somebody had communicated the facts to these attorneys.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have wired for the Redmond & Redmond letter. I had not intended to bring the matter up this morning, but in view of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] having presented his case, I concluded to present this and verify his case.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will.

Mr. ROSE. I have an idea that every person who is named in the casualty list will have a letter sent to his relatives from the firm of Redmond & Redmond, but I do not believe that the War-Risk Bureau had anything to do with divulging secrets in their department. I have noticed that that is the case in pension claims as well as for services in some other matters. I put the question whether the gentleman does not think himself that it will be ascertained later that this firm has written to every person interested in back pay for services to the Government?

Mr. KNUTSON. I know of several casualties where the firm of Redmond & Redmond did not write to the relatives.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Is it the gentleman's intention to ask for an investigation or is his purpose merely to advertise the fact that such communications are being sent out?

Mr. KNUTSON. Both.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Does the gentleman expect to make a motion that an investigating committee be appointed?

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think that it would be a waste of time to call for an investigation?

Mr. McCULLOCH. Not if it is as serious as the gentleman's statement of facts makes it appear.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is quite unlikely that this law firm can obtain the names of the relatives of the dead soldier and their addresses unless he receives them through some official.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is exactly the position I take.

Mr. FORDNEY. Therefore it is quite evident that this information came from some one in the employ of the Government, else the attorneys would not know the names and addresses of the relatives.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was going to ask the gentleman if most anybody could not get information from the bureau with reference to soldiers. They do not have to prove that they have an interest, do they?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think they can get it in a matter that might involve the filing of a claim. The rules of all the departments and bureaus prohibit that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I know that the gentleman from Minnesota does not intend in his statement to reflect on the War-Risk Insurance Bureau at a time when the people are just becoming informed as to the great work of that bureau. I think it would be much better to arrange to introduce a resolution for the appointment by the Speaker of a committee of 7 or 15 Members of the House to investigate the matter thoroughly and report.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think the gentleman's suggestion is a good one.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. I can not agree with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Washington. I would like to call the attention of the House to an amendment enacted into law making it a criminal offense to solicit such commissions as this letter presents. I would therefore offer the suggestion that the letters issued by Redmond & Redmond or any other attorneys be turned over to the Department of Justice. The law is explicit.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will find that the law he refers to only has reference to insurance and does not cover back pay.

Mr. TREADWAY. The amendment recently passed to the war-risk bureau bill which the chairman of the committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce introduced.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes to read the law referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] asks for two minutes to read the law. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has responsibility for reporting the war-risk insurance bill to the House, I think it only fair to them and to the House briefly to read the law applying to this subject, which is as follows:

Provided, however, That payment to any attorney or agent for such assistance as may be required in the preparation and execution of the necessary papers shall not exceed $3 in any one case—

The object of that being to cover notary fees and clerical work and the search sometimes, perhaps, of court records—

And provided further, That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the presentation or adjudication of claims under articles 2, 3, and 4, except that in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides, and that whenever judgment shall be rendered in an action brought pursuant to this provision, the court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 5 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant in behalf of whom such proceedings were instituted, to his attorney.

Any person who shall directly or indirectly solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or who shall attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, any fee or compensation, except as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DECKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. I call attention to the fact that this applies only to claims under the War-Risk Bureau, and does not apply to claims under the Quartermaster Department, which covers a claim such as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] calls attention to.

Mr. DECKER. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the letter from this firm read by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] specifically stating it does not apply to war-risk claims, shows on its face that it is an effort to evade the law by making it apply to only the Quartermaster General's Department claim.

Mr. DECKER. I want to say this, in addition. I have read the law for the purpose of showing to the House or reminding the House and the country that the House and the Congress have not been unmindful of the welfare of the soldiers or of those who may have been left dependent upon them after they have given their lives for their country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. DECKER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. In reading the amendment to the war-risk law, I did not hear the gentleman read the date of its passage.

Mr. DECKER. The bill was approved May 20, 1918. It seems to me that in matters like this—and I am not reflecting upon the motives of anyone who has spoken here upon the subject—the first thing for a man to do is to take a letter like that referred to either to the Department of Justice or to some of the Treasury officials so that they may be enabled to give the proper information thereon, because I do not believe that any of us want to give the impression to the country that this body is so derelict in its duty that it would allow the people of the country whose soldiers are fighting for us on the other side of the sea to be robbed by the vultures or the buzzards, as the gentleman from Mississippi calls them, who seek to profit through the death of these brave lads who die for the freedom of the country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, the matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the House is somewhat akin to the matter which has just been discussed, and yet it is somewhat different. I am not presenting my matter in the spirit of complaint or criticism, but for the consideration of the membership of the House. Unfortunately, many of our boys are dying on the front, and I have an idea that we will be confronted with many situations such as was called to my attention this morning. I received this morning a letter from a constituent, calling attention to the fact that Pvt. William T. Bloyd, Company A, Fifty-fifth Engineers, died in the service; that he had an insurance policy of $10,000, written by the Government; and that he had named as his beneficiaries in said policy his nieces and a nephew. This soldier died and after his death the department was called upon by these beneficiaries, asking for the payment of this policy to them. They were notified that they were not within the permitted class and were not, therefore, entitled to be named as beneficiaries and could not receive this insurance. I have a letter, which I shall read, written by the department to one of the persons named as beneficiary:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE,
Washington, June 18, 1918.

Miss GENEVIEVE SKINNER,
Green Ridge, Mo.

DEAR MADAM: We are in receipt of the emergency information blank returned by you, giving information in reference to William T. Bloyd, late of Company A, Fifty-fifth Engineers.

We note your statement that the deceased left neither widow, children, parents, brothers, or sisters.

Under the act of October 6, 1917, the deceased applied for $10,000 insurance, naming you, Ephraim Levi Skinner, and Ernest Bert Skinner as his beneficiaries. It is provided, however, under the same act that an enlisted man may apply for insurance and name as his beneficiary any one of the following permitted class: Parent, brother, sister, spouse, child, or grandchild. Having no one living within the permitted class, the insurance is not payable to anyone.

By an entirely separate and distinct provision of the same act compensation is payable to a wife, child, or dependent widowed mother. However, in this case no compensation is payable.

Any further communications addressed to this bureau should contain the full name, rank, and organization of the deceased. The number C-13187 should also appear thereon.

Very truly, yours,

H. C. HOULIHAN,
Superintendent of Compensation.
Per J. L. F.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. In a moment. I am not criticizing anyone, but it seems to me that here is a case which should command our attention. This policy, it appears, was written by the Government naming these nieces and the nephew as beneficiaries, and after the soldier dies these people are then told that they are not within the permitted class, and that the insurance can not be paid to them. I called up the insurance division of the Bureau of War Risk this morning and asked them to tell me how much premium the soldier had paid upon this policy. They informed me that they could not tell; that they did not have the records; that it was evidently paid through the Quartermaster General's Department. I called that department up, but was never able to connect with anyone who could give me the information, and have not yet been able to get the information I wanted. I anticipate we will have a number of this sort of cases. This soldier undoubtedly paid the premium upon the policy from the time he took it out until he died, and some one permitted him to name as beneficiaries those who are now told they are outside of the permitted class. What is to be done with the money that was deducted from this soldier's pay as premium upon the policy? If the Government can not, and I think it can not under the law, pay the money to the people named as beneficiaries, then some one ought to be "called down" for writing such a policy, and the premium collected on the same ought to be refunded.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I understand that in New York City and at other places where large bodies of troops have assembled, soldiers have asked lawyers in regard to naming beneficiaries who would not legally be beneficiaries, and the lawyers have said that if a soldier would make his insurance payable to his estate and then make his will he could name in the will the person he desired as his beneficiary. I doubt if that is so, but soldiers are naming their sweethearts by that plan.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain other letters.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOCHT. To ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute and to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to make a correction of an error made in another body by two eminent gentlemen with regard to a historical fact——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do it.

Mr. FOCHT. Well, I am not going to mention the name of anybody.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but the rule is that you can not comment on anything that happened in the Senate.

Mr. FOCHT. Then I am not going to refer to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. All right.

Mr. FOCHT. I recently read a statement to the effect that the State of Pennsylvania by legislative enactment had bought the estate of James Buchanan in Lancaster County, known as "Wheatland," and turned it into a public park in commemoration of the public life and service of the former proprietor. This statement is wholly in error, since Pennsylvania never did anything of the kind. The only monument erected in Pennsylvania in commemoration of the life and service of the former President was paid for by his niece, Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston, and now stands in an obscure spot in a ravine west of Foltz, Franklin County, Pa., adjacent to the site of the home where Mr. Buchanan was born. The matter of erecting a monument to James Buchanan having been settled, I have no desire to do other than set history aright, and particularly as it pertains to Pennsylvania, and to do this without reference as to the justification for the erection of monuments, public or private, to the memory of Pennsylvania's only President. We quote in part from the statement made by the eminent gentleman whose remarks are contained in the public document referred to, as follows:

For a full half century Mr. Buchanan's career had been weighed, scanned, and inspected by Pennsylvania's ablest jurists, publicists, and historians, and the verdict rendered by the unanimous vote of both houses of the people's representatives in the year of the semicentennial anniversary of his retirement from public life took the form of an act to take over and maintain as a public park his beautiful "Wheatland" estate adorned with a monument to his memory. Who now will say, except those who have already said it, that it is a seemly thing to sneer at the verdict of the loyal and rock-ribbed Republican Commonwealth upon the career of its great Democratic son?

We read in the same public document an emphasis and reiteration of this gross error regarding this mythical monument "erected on 'Wheatland' and the purchase of that estate by Pennsylvania as an act of commemoration and made a public park." This latter gentleman's deliverance is as follows:

I was greatly impressed by the suggestion * * * of a matter I had known before, but had forgotten—that by a unanimous vote of both houses of the legislature the great Republican State of Pennsylvania has recognized James Buchanan to the extent that it has purchased the beautiful estate "Wheatland," of which he himself was so fond, and has made it a memorial at which the citizens of Pennsylvania can meet and recall the services of the man whom they honor and respect whether we do or not.

In answer to a letter written to the recorder of deeds of Lancaster County, July 1, 1918, A. C. Welchaus, Esq., the recorder of deeds of said county, wrote as follows:

Former President James Buchanan devised the above estate "Wheatland" to his niece, Harriet Lane Johnston, who in 1884 sold it to Mary A. Willson. The said Mary A. Willson died intestate, leaving to survive her two children, Mary E. Willson and George B. Willson, to whom the same descended under the intestate laws of Pennsylvania and who are the present owners.

In further confirmation of the error in reference to purported action on the part of Pennsylvania in honoring the late James Buchanan by the purchase of "Wheatland" and turning the estate into a public park we have the following letter from Hon. Thomas L. Montgomery, librarian of the State Library of Pennsylvania:

Hon. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FOCHT: You asked me whether the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania had ever taken any action looking toward the purchase of the house of James Buchanan, and also whether there was any consideration of a monument to be placed there. I can find no act which refers at all to Buchanan in the laws of Pennsylvania except that of 1911 (P. L., p. 21): "An act to permit the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to accept from the trustee of the James Buchanan monument fund the land in Franklin County on which is erected a monument marking the birthplace of the late James Buchanan." This was put in charge of the forestry department.

Yours, very sincerely,

THOS. L. MONTGOMERY, State Librarian.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar Day and anything that happens hereafter to-day has to be done by unanimous consent unless that day is abolished.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 4723, an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is not the regular order the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Of course it is; and that is exactly what the Chair just announced—that anything that is done to-day is by unanimous consent unless to-day is abolished. The gentleman asks unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right, is the gentleman intending to ask the consideration of this bill——

Mr. KEATING. Yes; it is an omnibus pension bill. The House has offered certain amendments. The House must first agree to those amendments and then send it back to the Senate. This is a Senate bill that has come over to the House, and the House committee has reported it back with certain amendments. It is a very short bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act (S. 4723) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Alada T. P. Mills, widow of Albert L. Mills, late major general, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth K. Cottman, widow of Vincendon L. Cottman, late rear admiral, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of David A. Kooker, late of Company I, Second Regiment United States Volunteer Engineers, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oscar L. Geer, late of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Alonzo G. Williamson, late of Battery A, Third Regiment United States Field Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Charles E. Anderson, late of Company A, Twentieth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Wilson, late of Company L, Twentieth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mark M. Coffman, late of Troop K, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Martha E. Hammond, dependent mother of Daniel Howe, alias Daniel Hammond, late of Troop I, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Louise R. Hanley, widow of William B. Hanley, late of Company F, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said William B. Hanley until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The name of Amy E. Wingreen, now Macomber, late nurse, Medical Department, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Belle H. Purdon, widow of William R. Purdon, late captain Company I, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John Bernard Rueben, alias Bernard Reuben, late of Battery D, First Regiment United States Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Wood, widow of Palmer G. Wood, late brigadier general, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Smith, late of Company L, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Stafford, widow of Samuel B. Stafford, late captain Company C, First Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of James Besheres, late of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of David Krant, late of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Amy B. Mitchell, widow of William G. Mitchell, late of Company I, Thirtieth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said William G. Mitchell until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Louis Miller, late of Battery B, Utah Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dora L. Brown, dependent mother of Wilbur H. Brown, late of Troop F, First Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John W. Franklin, late of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Robert J. Erwin, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert H. Bailey, late of Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Grant, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Missouri Perea, widow of Beverly Perea, late first sergeant, United States Army, retired, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Beverly Perea until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The name of Julia Carey, dependent mother of Christian C. Carey, late of U. S. S. Dale, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The first committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 6 to 9 inclusive, as follows:

"The name of Alada T. P. Mills, widow of Albert L. Mills, late major general, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a protest against this amendment. I do not care to bring up a formal contest at this time, because I do not know what action the Senate may take on an amendment of this character, but this provision in the Senate bill proposes to raise the pension of the widow of Maj. Gen. Albert L. Mills from $30 to $50 a month. The Committee on Pensions has, I understand, adopted a rule that they will not allow any widow in excess of $25 per month. My information is that the Committee on Invalid Pensions does not take that position. Now, I do not believe that this stand taken by the Committee on Pensions can prevail ultimately. I do not know what position the conferees of the Senate will take, but if they take the position that they will not yield to this amendment of the House, then I want to reserve the right, so far as I am concerned, to make a contest in the House upon this proposition. It seems to me that it is absolutely unjust, unfair, inequitable, and untenable for the House to say that it will not give the widow of a major or of a colonel more than $25 a month, or the widow of a general, as in this case. We might just as well say that we will not pay an officer in the Army any more than we pay a private soldier.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. I will.

Mr. KEATING. Was the gentleman in the House when we were considering the war-risk insurance bill?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes; I was here.

Mr. KEATING. And when the gentleman from Texas made the motion that the widows of officers and privates should receive exactly the same allowance?

Mr. MAGEE. There is not anything in the law creating the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance contrary to my contention.

Mr. KEATING. Was the gentleman in the House?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes; I was here.

Mr. KEATING. Did he vote for or against the provision?

Mr. MAGEE. I was here, but what I say is that the position taken by your committee is absolutely unwarranted in law.

Mr. KEATING. What attitude did the gentleman take when the bill dealing with the widows of soldiers and officers of this war was before the House?

Mr. MAGEE. What attitude does the Committee on Invalid Pensions take?

Mr. KEATING. I am not asking that question.

Mr. MAGEE. I ask you that question.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman should have information concerning his own action. Did the gentleman vote on the war-risk insurance bill?

Mr. MAGEE. You answer my question. What I say is this, that some day this question must be determined by the House. So far as I am concerned, I have not gotten down to such a socialistic basis that I am willing to say that the widow of a general, who perhaps performed illustrious services for his country, shall not receive some recognition from the Government, and that the pay of the widow of a general shall be placed exactly on the same basis as the pay of the widow of a private soldier.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAGEE. What I want to say now is that while I do not propose to raise a formal contest at this time, if the Senate does not yield to the House amendment, I will, when the matter comes back to the House, fight for justice, equity, and fairness toward the widows of efficient and illustrious Army officers.

Mr. KEATING. Of course, the gentleman has the unalienable right, when the matter comes back from the Senate, to make such a fight as he sees fit. But I want to call attention to the fact that the House has on a number of occasions expressed itself in a decisive fashion concerning this matter of increasing the pensions of widows of officers above the figures allowed by law. In the last Congress the Committee on Pensions came before the House with a number of such cases, and, led by the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. MANN, of Illinois, the House decided it would not increase the pensions of widows of officers above the figures allowed by law.

In this Congress the question was placed before the House when we were considering the war-risk insurance bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] made a motion to place the widows of officers and men on an exact equality. That proposition was debated here, and not more than half a dozen Members voted in favor of granting the widows of officers pensions in excess of those allowed the widows of privates. And so far as the Committee on Pensions in this House is concerned, it will continue to adhere to its position that officers' widows are to be treated exactly like the widows of privates, and the committee will not change its position until the House reverses its decision.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OSBORNE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California desire to debate this amendment?

Mr. OSBORNE. I do. I quite agree with the theory that privates and generals should be treated alike as to pensions, but I dissent from the position of the committee in this respect: That where either private or a general has rendered some peculiar service that entitles him to recognition above his fellows, then the Committee on Pensions should make it possible, or should not by their rules make it impossible, to recognize such special service, whether rendered by a major general or a corporal or a private.

There is another item in this bill similar to the one which is now under consideration, that of the widow of Gen. Palmer G. Wood, late brigadier general in the United States Army, and a resident of my district. This lady has lost not only her husband in the service but has lost her two splendid sons, and is in circumstances that really entitle her to special consideration. And it is cases of this kind that I think should be made exceptional, whether they be generals or whether they be privates.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendments were also read and agreed to:

Page 2, strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive. (Pension of Elizabeth K. Cottman.)

Page 4, strike out line 23 and strike to and including line 2, on page 5. (Pension of Louis Miller.)

Page 6, strike out lines 4 to 8, inclusive. (Pension of Julia Carey.)

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEATING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SITE OF PUBLIC BUILDING AT EATONTON, GA.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10609) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 10609, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10609) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city.

Mr. WALSH. That bill is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Why can not the gentleman wait until it is reached?

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman let me make an explanation?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve the right to object in order that the gentleman may make a statement. But we are going to call up the Unanimous Consent Calendar presently.

Mr. BRAND. I would like to make a statement. This bill authorizes the changing of the post-office site from the present location to the site on the public square, and is recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and by the Treasury Department. The owner of the property adjoining it wants to erect a $25,000 or $30,000 hotel right next to it, and until the fate of this bill is determined he does not know what to do.

Mr. WALSH. Well, a few hours would not make any difference to him.

Mr. BRAND. He owns the property where it is proposed to locate the new post-office building, and he owns the adjoining property, and if this transfer is authorized he wants to build a fine hotel next to it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a House bill?

Mr. BRAND. Yes; this is a House bill.

Mr. MONDELL. So that whatever action we take now, the bill would not become a law for some time, in any event. The Senate stands in recess for six weeks.

Mr. BRAND. Yes; but this man will have to make arrangements for an architect and a contractor, employ workmen, and make other arrangements to erect this building. We know, if it passes the House, that it will likely pass the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to the passage of the bill, but it is on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent and it is only 8 or 9 or 10 numbers down on the first page of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and the chances are a hundred to one that it will be reached when that calendar is called. I do not object to its consideration, but I think the gentleman should wait, because if he takes this off the Unanimous Consent Calendar and asks for its immediate consideration it will undoubtedly be followed by other requests of that kind, although if the calendar is reached it can be disposed of there.

Mr. BRAND. But it may not be reached.

Mr. WALSH. I will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I observe the majority leader [Mr. KITCHIN] is on the floor, and I want to take this opportunity to make an inquiry. No, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order, and I understand that is calling the Unanimous Consent Calendar. For the present I object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND]?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman just demanded the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the regular order is the calling of the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to put the very question I have put.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then for the time being I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SHOUSE. Before that is done, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4194, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHOUSE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request relative to the bill S. 4722.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas makes the same request relative to the bill S. 4722. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4722) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the same order will be made.

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHOUSE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request relative to the bill S. 4543.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4543) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the same order will be made and the same conferees appointed.

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHOUSE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. LANGLEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asks five minutes in which to interrogate the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. STAFFORD. No, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order, which, I believe, is the calling of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Wisconsin made no such request, the able objector on this side to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WALSH. I base my objection on the statement of the Chair.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, owing to what I believe to be the overwhelming sentiment of the House for three-day recesses, or adjournments, until August 19, I desire to suggest a gentlemen's agreement—that is, subject to the passage by the House of the Agricultural appropriation bill to-day—that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet Thursday, and will adjourn Thursday until the following Monday, and from Monday to Thursday, and so on, each respective Monday and Thursday, until August 19; that on these days of meeting no business shall be transacted. After the Chaplain's prayer and the reading and approval of the Journal, then an adjournment to the respective Mondays or Thursdays will be had. And I want to say in connection with this that the request I make to-day, as well as the request I made on Saturday, is with the approval and consent of the President. As I said Saturday, Senator SIMMONS and myself conferred with the President on Friday, and the question came up as to adjournment of the Senate and the House until around about August 20. The President expressly approved and consented, saying that there was in sight no urgent legislation necessary to be passed in the meantime. Now, we can not make a unanimous-consent order to cover all of this agreement. It can be only a gentleman's agreement. I would say, too, that it is unnecessary for the House to stay in session from now until August 19, or even until August 24, for the reason that the Senate has entered a unanimous-consent agreement, which it can do, to have these three-day recesses until August 24.

As I said, the President understands the matter. There is no urgent legislation to be transacted in the House before then. In the meantime it will be understood that if during these three-day recesses until August 19 there shall at any time arise circumstances which, in the opinion of the administration, will necessitate legislation, the minority Member and I will give sufficient notice to the Members to come in. As I said, practically no effective business could be transacted by the House until after the 19th, or until the Senate returns. In the meantime it will take the Ways and Means Committee certainly until August 19, and perhaps longer, to report the revenue bill. There is no reason why Members who are compelled to remain should have to come in here every morning only to witness adjournment; and as to those who can go home, certainly it will be unnecessary to make them stay around Washington until August 19. I trust that every Member will in good faith enter into this agreement. But if there is anyone who is unwilling to enter into this agreement and keep it in good faith, he ought to make it known now.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have frequently conferred with the gentleman and others here about the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is this agreement to supersede the calling of the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it is to take effect when we adjourn to-day.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to have that calendar called so as to reach the very urgent case of some settlers, which I have mentioned several times.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not know——

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course it may not be passed by unanimous consent, but I would like to have the opportunity to try.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that at 3.30 o'clock to-day he will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota to move to suspend the rules and pass that bill. He promised him that four weeks ago. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. In answer to the gentleman, my thought is that if we enter into this gentleman's agreement the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be called immediately and disposed of, so far as we can, and then we will take up the Agricultural bill and dispose of that; and so by the time when we adjourn to-night, if we enter into this agreement, the Unanimous Consent Calendar and the Agricultural bill will be out of the way.

Mr. GARNER. If the Agricultural bill passes the House, it can not pass the Senate before August 26.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. While I can not quite agree with the gentleman that there are no important matters pending in the House to be acted upon, I should like to know what is to be gained by passing the Agricultural bill to-day?

Mr. SISSON. It will get it out of the House.

Mr. WALSH. It can not be acted upon in the Senate until after this recess. Why can we not devote the day to the Unanimous Consent Calendar and then adjourn? There are other matters pending. I do not know why we should give the Agricultural bill the preference.

Mr. KITCHIN. There are members of the Agricultural Committee who would be inclined to oppose this gentleman's agreement unless the Agricultural bill is disposed of by the House.

Mr. WALSH. They may find other gentlemen who are inclined to oppose the gentleman's agreement if they insist on passing the Agricultural bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would ask the gentleman what objection he would have to passing the bill to-day?

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the members of the Committee on Agriculture are very anxious to dispose of this proposition and put it over to the Senate. We are satisfied that the passage of the Agricultural bill to-day ought not to take more than a very few minutes. Then the Unanimous Consent Calendar can go on until we adjourn this afternoon. If we should delay the Agricultural bill until we come back here after the recess, if we have one, the probability is that the bill would have to be reintroduced and committee hearings had, and it might take us a week or 10 days to pass the bill. As it is now all amendments have been agreed to by both Houses, and it seems to me we can easily pass it to-day, because there is nothing in dispute, either in this House or at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, the gentleman is assuming that all that will happen will be that this bill will be read at the desk and that nobody will attempt to amend it. I think the gentleman is due for a surprise.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that the calling up of the Agricultural appropriation bill will provoke extended discussion in the House.

Mr. LEVER. My understanding with the minority members is that with liberal discussion there will be no prolonged debate on the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The whole membership of the House have not been consulted in reference to this matter.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And in view of the fact that nothing can be done with the Agricultural bill by the Senate until after the recess and that many Members desire to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar and to make motions to suspend the rules, I think the time can be much better spent than in now considering the Agricultural bill.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say that I have been informed by gentlemen on the other side that if we could get unanimous consent for a five-day extension of remarks on the veto message on the $2.40 wheat proposition it would greatly curtail the discussion on the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. An extension in that way might be satisfactory to some Members, but it would be unsatisfactory to others. This is a very live matter which Members want to discuss face to face on the floor.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman understands that I could not get the bill up now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish the gentleman would not call it up or put it in the way of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Kansas that this bill has been under consideration and passed by the House and by the Senate, agreed to except the provision in relation to the price of wheat. My understanding is that there are no items in the bill that are in dispute, and it occurred to me that the bill might be passed within a short time, but by Members on this side I was advised that there was no time desired except for a few minutes. I understand if the bill is taken up for debate it could not be passed to-day, and I know of no particular reason why the bill should not go over if it is so desired.

Mr. WALSH. All that the gentleman says will be true on the 19th of August.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but if we pass it now it would be out of the way.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and there are a lot of other bills that if we pass now would be out of the way.

Mr. LEVER. If gentlemen will permit, I desire to say that I do not feel disposed to stand in the way of the gentleman's agreement for a recess for three days at a time by insisting on the immediate passage of the Agricultural appropriation bill. And if there is anyone who would object to this unanimous-consent agreement on account of the Agricultural appropriation bill, I now notify the House that I shall not undertake to press the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina. We have something like 200 bills on the calendar. I do not wish to stand for a policy which will delay the passage of these bills, which will not get them through the House in time for the Senate to pass them. One bill I have in mind now on the calendar has been passed by the House twice unanimously, but failed to pass the Senate because the Senate had not the time.

Mr. KITCHIN. The fault seems to have been with the Senate and not with the House.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; but if we could get it through soon they might have the time to consider it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Our thought is that the Senate will have under consideration the revenue bill for a month and a half or two months, and that during that time we will take a few days for the Private Calendar and bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and then, perhaps, if there is no other urgent legislation or war measures, some time in October, or possibly in September, we might have another gentleman's agreement for a three days' adjournment for 30 days while waiting for Senate action on the revenue bill. We have had that in practically every session in which we have had a revenue bill. But I promise the gentleman that we will not then ask for a unanimous-consent three days' adjournment until we have had some days for the consideration of the business on the Private Calendar and the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. FRENCH. Then it is the gentleman's opinion that this agreement would not delay the outcome of these bills?

Mr. GARNER. No; it would hasten the consideration of them.

Mr. KITCHIN. My idea is that it would expedite them. I think the committee can report the revenue bill two or three weeks earlier with this recess agreement than if the House was in continuous session every day, for the reason that the members of the committee are often called out by something that transpires in the House—some gentleman makes the point of no quorum and the members of the committee have to leave their work, as we have several times this session, two or three times a day.

Mr. Speaker, I make the unanimous-consent request which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned until Thursday next, and that thereafter the House shall meet only on Monday and Thursday each week until the 19th day of August next, and that adjournments on such Mondays and Thursdays shall be until the succeeding Monday or Thursday, as the case may be.

Mr. SIMS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman from North Carolina in making a statement a while ago inadvertently stated something that might be misunderstood. The gentleman said there would be really no reason why Members should return before August 26, when he must have intended to say August 19.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I said that Members could not go home. Some Members will necessarily have to stay here. In fact, there will have to be some Members here every time we meet, because there might be some gentlemen present who would say "I was not present and therefore not a party to this agreement that no business should be done, and I call up such and such a matter," and who would insist on some action, making no-quorum points of order, demanding roll calls, and so forth. We will have to have enough Members present at each session to prevent that being done. As to the Members who do go home, they can go home with the knowledge that no business will be done, and there will be no use of keeping them here for 30 days while the Ways and Means Committee is preparing the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I had no reference to that situation; I have reference to the statement of the gentleman that there would be no real need to return until the 26th of August.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I said, or intended to say, the 19th, and the unanimous-consent order shows that. On the 19th, when we return, the gentleman's bill, the water-power bill, will have a privileged status, and he will be able to take it up just as he would if no recess took place.

Mr. CANNON. Which makes a quorum necessary at that time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. The water-power bill will occupy the same situation then as though we had not made this agreement?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The order made respecting the water-power bill a week or two ago holds.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the Senate has practically taken a recess until the 26th of August.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. So that the Senate will not be in condition to perform work until the 26th. This proposition, as I heard it read, is that the House shall take a recess practically until the 19th.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then it will be necessary from the 19th to the 26th that we should have a quorum here?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Qui bono—what good?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we shall have a quorum then. If we do not, it will be the fault of the Members who do not return.

Mr. CANNON. But I do not propose, as one Member, to be called back here, with the Senate not in session, for a whole week.

Mr. KITCHIN. It would not be necessary for the Senate to be in session for the House to consider even the revenue bill, much less the Agricultural bill. I think the House will recognize its duty and that we will have a quorum here, and that in that week we will be able to pass, perhaps, the water-power bill—that is my hope—and then take up the revenue bill. It would not be necessary to have the Senate here in order to do that, or to have it in continual session for us to pass the revenue bill.

Mr. WALSH. If objection is made to fixing the date at the 19th, would the gentleman renew his request and fix the date on the 26th?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would hate to do that, because we would like to take this bill up and have it ready for the Senate to consider when it meets.

Mr. SIMS. That is the Agricultural bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; or the water-power bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is assuming that the water-power bill is going to pass the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the action taken by the Senate in agreeing to recess three days at a time until August 24, it is very patent to all of us that the House could do very little in advancing legislation by remaining in session in the meantime. Therefore, under these circumstances it would seem that the wise thing for the House to do would be to agree to the unanimous-consent suggestion made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. There are some of us who expect to be here and who will try to help carry out that agreement in the interim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question. My understanding is that there is to be no business transacted until the 19th?

Mr. KITCHIN. There will be no business transacted at all.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Would the gentleman object to putting that into the form of the request?

Mr. KITCHIN. That can not go in under the rules, but this will be a gentleman's agreement. The days of the meetings and adjournments of the House, not exceeding three days at a time, can by consent be made the order of the House, but the gentleman's agreement is to do no business and to adjourn after the reading and approval of the Journal.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would suggest that the presiding officer in another body at the other end of the Capitol has held that under the agreement they have entered into there, to recess every three days until August 26, he is not authorized to appoint conferees.

Mr. KITCHIN. And we will not do anything. I will say this, that every man who can go home may go with the knowledge that we are not going to do anything during the three-day recesses. I recognize the fact that there are a great many who can not go, and who have official business here that must be attended to during the recesses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to occupy a moment or two. Although I am reserving the right to object, I do not intend to make any objection, but I do desire to express my disapproval of this program. I think that Congress should have remained in session at a time like this. This adjournment will delay the completion of our business.

I think the result will be to extend the session all through October. It would have been better to continue our work at this time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Why does not the gentleman object, if he feels that way?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Because the Senate has already adjourned and agreed to stay in recess until late next month, so that we can get nothing done with our bills if we pass them. I realize that in the present situation nothing would be accomplished, and while I have got to stay here anyway I do not wish to make others stay to no purpose.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is on the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And it is making up the revenue bill. Does the gentleman think we can work over there while this House is in session considering this matter?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not so well, of course; but if the Committee on Ways and Means were excused from attendance upon the House it could be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think this proposition had better be deferred a little later in the day. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the gentleman from South Carolina is here. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. RANDALL. I have reserved the right to object. The House recently passed an important bill known as the food-production bill, which we all understand is tied up in the Senate, and I want to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina what will be the attitude of his committee in respect to that bill after it passes the Senate. Will it be laid before the House without delay after action or sent to a conference committee?

Mr. LEVER. I can assure the gentleman there will be no delay on that bill as far as I am concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. There will be immediate action by the House after the Senate passes it?

Mr. LEVER. The probability is the bill upon objection will go to the Committee on Agriculture, but I can assure the gentleman it will be reported back as expeditiously as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.] The Clerk will call the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a financial statement touching the expenditures of the Government for the past fiscal year and the appropriations for the succeeding fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to print a statement of the expenditures of the past fiscal year and appropriations for the succeeding fiscal year. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman aware in preferring that request that a similar request has been preferred by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]? I wish to inquire whether it is the same statement that he has in mind to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I presume the figures will be largely the same, but I am not advised as to just what the gentleman from Illinois proposes to print. What I desired to do was to make for the House the usual statement that is made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations touching receipts and expenditures and appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I am inclined to think if the gentleman makes a complete statement that it would be a fair statement, and I doubt whether I will file mine.

Mr. SHERLEY. I beg to say to the gentleman the statement I had in mind is to give to the House and the country the facts, and that it is in no sense a political statement.

Mr. CANNON. There will be no difficulty about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of appropriations and expenditures since the beginning of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of appropriations and expenditures since we entered into the war. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the congressional recess.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from the State of Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the recess. Is there objection?

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman in favor of a recess or against it?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think we ought to have all the Members here. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will report the first bill.

MEDALS OR DECORATIONS FROM FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2796) to permit American citizens to wear medals or decorations received from certain foreign countries on entering the military or naval service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the military appropriation bill recently passed carried some provision relating to the privilege of conferring medals of honor, and I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Nebraska whether this bill was not covered in the agreement of the conferees?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman from Wisconsin states a fact, and I move to lay this bill upon the table, it having been taken care of in the general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER NEAR LOUDON, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10818) to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, when this bill was first considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, about six weeks ago, if my memory serves me right, some gentleman represented that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] wished to be present when it was considered. It has been passed over on two occasions since, with that understanding in mind. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is not present.

Mr. SIMS. I can answer the gentleman. I was the one who made the request. I reported this bill, and on the day that that request was made to me I was called up by the clerk from Mr. AUSTIN's office, who said that he did not want the bill considered in Mr. AUSTIN's absence. When Mr. AUSTIN came back and I saw him, he said it was an error, and he would be very glad indeed to have it considered as early as possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tennessee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation near the city of Loudon, Loudon County, Tenn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressely reserved.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out the word "expressely," incorrectly spelled, and insert the same word correctly spelled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the telegraph and telephone bill recently passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the wire bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS FOR TRAMROADS, CANALS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7236) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Idaho state why it was necessary to put the limitation of 5 acres of ground in the bill, this being 5 acres of ground adjoining these rights of way?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The bill does not state that the size of the tract shall be 5 acres, but not exceeding 5 acres. That amount of land is necessary in order that these ditch riders or attendants, for whose convenience and comfort it is proposed to construct houses along the canals, shall have ample space; for, in addition to land upon which to erect a house and barn, land is needed for corrals for the horses and cows, as these men frequently have two or three horses and one or two cows. They are usually married and have their families with them, making it desirable to have several acres surrounding these stations for the purposes indicated, and so that the dwelling may not be too near the canal.

Mr. WALSH. Is 5 acres of ground a standard amount of space for one or two horses and three or four cows?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Not necessarily. They need space for them to roam around and have exercise. The land is absolutely worthless. It is on the public domain and generally arid and wild land.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the case, why not give a hundred acres?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They do not need that much.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose the rider has more than two or three horses?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They never have more than two or three horses, as they do not need more.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state where they keep their horses now?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They keep their horses tethered on the public domain, as they are not allowed to fence the land. They simply tie the horses with ropes and allow them to range around.

Mr. WALSH. Where do the ditch riders live?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. On the right of way, on the banks of the laterals or the canals. The proposition of providing the 5 acres, in addition to accommodating their horses and cows, is that they may build their homes a little distance from the canal.

Mr. WALSH. What is the advantage of that?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Because there is danger of the children of the family getting into the water. It is a matter of safety. In order to get men to stay at these remote places it is almost always necessary to get married men, because a single man does not want to stay out there. The married men are more satisfied, being permanently located.

Mr. WALSH. I think this limitation of 5 acres is too much.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Well, it is optional with the Secretary of the Interior. If he finds they do not need it, he can give them 2 acres or 1 acre.

Mr. WALSH. They are not, as I understand it, occupying any such space now within the right of way?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Now they have to keep their horses tied, and they range around in that way.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask how many people this will probably affect in this over 1,000 miles of canals and tramroads, and so forth?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Probably 100 people in the State of Idaho are engaged in this work of protecting the dams and the ditches.

Mr. WALSH. It is not limited to the State of Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; not necessarily.

Mr. WALSH. There would be 500 acres of the public lands in the State of Idaho that would be subject to this law if the Secretary granted the permission.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I may say, in addition to what I have stated with reference to the necessity of accommodating these people as proposed, that since the war began it has been deemed necessary to employ guards to go into the vicinity of these canals and dams to protect them against possible destruction by those not in sympathy with our country's war policy. They are employed at the county expense, and the irrigation companies also employ some. The State also had some guards out there in order to remove the danger of the blowing up of these dams.

Mr. WALSH. Are you going to give to each one of these guards 5 acres?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No. The guard does not get title to the land. It simply widens the right of way in those localities where it is desired to establish these stations.

Mr. WALSH. The Secretary of the Interior, who seems to think, if the change is made that he recommends, that the measure would be unobjectionable, states that the interest in the land in the nature of an easement is provided for by this grant.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The easement granted is just like any other right of way over the public domain granted under the general right-of-way acts.

Mr. WALSH. Where does the gentleman read that in the law?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is in the general law.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, the right-of-way act of 1891, which is referred to, is the right-of-way act which gives a perpetual easement. The particular right-of-way act referred to is the right of way which applies only to irrigation work, and it grants, as, of course, is necessary in cases of that kind, a perpetual easement. My attention in the past has been called to this situation a number of times. It is true that in the building of a reclamation project, the right of way being narrow, there is occasionally needed above the ditches, where the land is dry and arid and generally practically worthless, a little land for the accommodation of those who have charge of the ditches. This would all be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and of course no acreage of that kind would be allowed unless, in his opinion, it would be necessary.

Mr. WALSH. What would be the situation if a man built his house on these 5 acres and confined his horses and cattle there and then left the job? Would he have to give up the easement in that land?

Mr. MONDELL. It is a perpetual easement in the canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Still further reserving the right to object. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I can not find any valid objection, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], both of whom are experts in this class of legislation. The information they have given me is sufficient.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get a little more information on this subject, because, as I understand, it is an outright grant. I would like to know whether or not the words "determined by the Secretary of the Interior" as used would give the Secretary of the Interior the absolute control, leaving it in his discretion as to whether any particular district would have 5 acres? This absolutely grants to each district 5 acres.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. "Not exceeding 5 acres," according to the phraseology of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. It says "it is hereby granted." He is authorized to permit the use of 5 acres if in his judgment it is necessary; but more than that, you make it an absolute grant.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not so understand it. Not a grant as in a patent, simply an irrevocable permit.

Mr. WINGO. What condition is put in?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is optional with the Secretary of the Interior. He grants it under the right-of-way act, if the land is to be used for the purposes contemplated by the law.

Mr. WINGO. That is what I want to get at. I do not recall the provisions of that law. Does that give the Secretary any discretion at all?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Of course, it gives him discretion to act if the conditions enumerated in the law are complied with.

Mr. WINGO. You make an absolute grant here. In line 4 you say "by the Secretary of the Interior," but your legislative enactment is an absolute grant. But it says before that, "subject to the conditions and restrictions." That still does not prevent it from being an absolute grant for all practical purposes, the same as if you named a particular piece of land and said that the Land Office is directed to issue the patent. What are the restrictions? What are the limitations and the conditions?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The right-of-way act of 1891 is what is known as the irrigation right-of-way act, and anyone who proves to the Secretary of the Interior that he has a right to divert a certain amount of water at a certain place and carry it to a certain point for irrigation purposes, and who makes application setting out the forms of the work and the character of the work and the dams and the ditches and head gates and plan and style, and what is proposed to do, and what the party has the right to do in the irrigation of the land, thereupon he grants the right of way.

Mr. WINGO. That is for the improvement and the canal?

Mr. MONDELL. For the canal and the reservoir.

Mr. WINGO. Necessary improvements that constitute the physical project?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but it only includes a certain distance on each side of the canals and the reservoir. And this situation develops, that in caring for one of these projects, one of these big canals that runs for some miles, it is sometimes necessary to have a small piece of land lying above the ditch, a small piece of dry land above the ditch, for management purposes; and while the right-of-way act is a grant—and this would be a grant or easement, not a patent, an easement in perpetuity as long as the land is used for this purpose—while that is a grant, of course, the inclusion of one of these locations in the grant is in the discretion, under this bill, of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WINGO. Does each location mean one irrigation project or district?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; it simply means places where it may be deemed necessary to locate a home or a station for a ditch rider. They may be 50 miles apart or 10 or 20 miles.

Mr. WINGO. The word "location" means this: Any point that the authorities of the irrigation project wanted to designate as a location for a house for a caretaker or other employee. Then under that act they could designate locations for every employee?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; but there is no probability that they will employ more men than they need.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, it is to be assumed that the Secretary of the Interior will use good judgment in the granting of these rights. Let me suggest to my friend that this will always be land above the ditch. No grant of land below the ditch is required or necessary, because that is land required for irrigation purposes. It is necessarily the dry and generally rocky and comparatively valueless land that lies above the line of the ditches. It is land that any homestead settler could get 160 or 320 or 640 acres of, as the case may be, free, as a settlement right; so that the land acquired could, under no circumstances, be land of any considerable value. The Secretary must decide in his good judgment how frequently along the line of a canal this sort of an acreage would be required, once in 20 miles or once in 10 miles, and whether or not as much as 5 acres will be required.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contend that the words "to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior" have reference to the number of the locations?

Mr. MONDELL. And the acreage.

Mr. WINGO. The acreage is to be 5 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. Not to exceed 5 acres; so that the discretion of the Secretary applies to the acreage and to the number of the locations.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman thinks that under the wording of the act the Secretary of the Interior will have some control over the number of locations?

Mr. MONDELL. Absolute control.

Mr. WINGO. If that is the fact, I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In any event there is no probability that the company is going to employ extra employees who are not needed.

Mr. WINGO. It appeared to me that all that would be necessary in order for the company to get an absolute grant of any number of these 5-acre tracts would be to make a sufficient number of locations and designations.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The Secretary of the Interior will not approve permits for useless stations, even if they were applied for, which is unlikely.

Mr. WINGO. But if the gentleman thinks the Secretary of the Interior will have control of that under the language of the bill, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. FRENCH. More than that, the sentiment of the settlers in favor of the limitation of the expenses would be an additional safeguard to keep down the number of locations.

Mr. WINGO. My observation is that the sentiment of the settlers does not always control those who are handling these Government lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, and amended May 11, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States for the purposes of furnishing water for domestic, irrigation, public, and for other beneficial uses, of the right of way through the public lands of the United States for canals and reservoirs to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of such canals or reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, and in addition thereto, at locations to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, 5 acres of ground to be used for the erection thereon of dwellings and outbuildings for the convenience of ditch riders and other employees engaged in the management of said canals and reservoirs."

With the following committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 13, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in addition to the rights of way granted by sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., p. 1095), as amended by the act of Congress entitled 'An act to amend the irrigation act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., p. 1095, sec. 18), and to amend section 2 of the act of May 11, 1898 (30 Stats., p. 404),' approved March 4, 1917 (39 Stats., p. 1197), and, subject to the conditions and restrictions therein contained, there is hereby granted not to exceed 5 acres of ground adjoining the right of way at each of the locations, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to be used for the erection thereon of dwellings or other buildings for the convenience of those engaged in the care and management of the works provided for by said acts."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I simply want to call attention to the fact that the title of the bill does not now correctly state the amendment proposed. But the title does not control, and it does refer to one of the amendments affected, so I do not think it is necessary to change the title, because the language of the bill itself is entirely clear and definite. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] an amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESURVEY OF LANDS HERETOFORE SURVEYED.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8004) authorizing the resurvey or retracement of lands heretofore returned as surveyed public lands of the United States under certain conditions.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Let the bill be reported. It seems to be a bill changing existing law.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the application of the owners of three-fourths of the privately owned lands in any township covered by public-land surveys, more than 50 per cent of the area of which townships is privately owned, accompanied by a deposit with the United States surveyor general for the proper State, or if there be no surveyor general of such State, then with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the proportionate estimated cost, inclusive of the necessary work, of the resurvey or retracement of all the privately owned lands in said township, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, subject to the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized in his discretion to cause to be made a resurvey or retracement of the lines of said township and to set permanent corners and monuments in accordance with the laws and regulations governing surveys and resurveys of public lands; that the sum so deposited shall be held by the surveyor general or commissioner when ex officio surveyor general and may be expended in payment of the cost of such survey, including field and office work, and any excess over the cost of such survey and the expenses incident thereto shall be repaid pro rata to the person making said deposits or their legal representatives; that the proportionate cost of the field and office work for the resurvey or retracement of any public lands in such township shall be paid from the current appropriation for the survey and resurvey of public lands; that similar resurveys and retracements may be made on the application, accompanied by the requisite deposit, of any court of competent jurisdiction, the returns of such resurvey or retracement to be submitted to the court; that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations to carry this act into full force and effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, who has charge of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FOSTER. I want to reserve the right to object to this.

Mr. KINKAID. This bill was reported by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE]. I defer to him if he wishes to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Do I understand the gentleman to reserve the right to object?

Mr. WINGO. I reserve the right to object. I want some statement about the bill.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I want to say with reference to this bill that we who have lived in the West know the necessity for its enactment, by reason of the fact that there are certain townships in many parts of the West where the Government markings have been erased. There are many whole townships where there is not a Government cornerstone to be found. These townships have been settled up by actual settlers, and the earlier arrivals have arranged their locations according to information received from some source, and they have built permanent improvements. Yet later arrivals are, in many instances, contesting these boundaries, and trouble in consequence is of frequent occurrence. To obviate this condition, these lands should be resurveyed, and many petitions have been filed with the department for this purpose. These in all cases have been denied where more than 50 per cent of the lands had passed to patent or alienated.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield right there? What is to prevent them from doing like I thought was the custom everywhere—it is the custom in my State—going and employing a public surveyor and paying him to do the work, to rerun his lines, if he has any doubt about the correctness of his locations?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. There is this reason: These people believe they are entitled to a Government survey upon which they can rely in locating their lands.

Mr. WINGO. They have it already.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. And the further reason that serious trouble has resulted in neighborhoods by reason of having it left to a local authority to determine; whereas, if it was settled definitely by the Federal authorities, this trouble would pass away, and all would abide by a survey made by the General Government.

Mr. WINGO. But, if the gentleman will permit me right there, this is the information I want to get. There is nothing undertermined at present. The survey that the United States Government has made of these Government lands is fixed and unquestioned. Now, if there is any dispute about the recorded survey and the records that are in the Surveyor General's office, you already have ample authority of law to cover that.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. What is it?

Mr. WINGO. I do not remember the details of it, but I have a hazy recollection of calling upon the Surveyor General's office and furnishing to one of our surveyors all the information that they had in the office here. If there is an error in it, then I think the Surveyor General has authority to complete his records and correct any errors that there may be in his record. But why should you go, at the expense of the Government of the United States, and rerun the United States survey, unless it be in a case where you can show that there is some error in the old survey?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. This bill carries no expense to the General Government, for this resurvey for private lands is borne by the owners of these lands, and the Government would only pay for the public lands.

Mr. WINGO. Who is going to pay it?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It provides that upon petition of three-fourths of the residents of the locality where the resurvey is desired, when they accompany that petition with the full cost of the resurvey, in so far as the private lands are concerned——

Mr. WINGO. That is the resurvey of private lands. Who is going to pay for the resurvey of the public lands?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The ruling of the department in relation to resurveys is that they will make a resurvey of a township where less than one-fifth or one-half has passed to private ownership. They use the appropriation made by Congress in making a resurvey under those circumstances. But they also hold that where more than 50 per cent has passed to patent they can not apply the funds appropriated by Congress, and refuse to make the resurvey. It is only to care for this class that this bill is asked. They pay for it themselves, which they are perfectly willing to do, but they want the Government back of that survey instead of a local survey by the county surveyor.

Mr. WINGO. What good would that do?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. They are more apt to abide by the result.

Mr. WINGO. Will not the court abide by the decision of the survey of the official surveyor of the county or State? Can the gentleman tell me a single court that has refused to abide by the lines run by the official surveyor of the State?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I do not think I can cite any individual case, but I do know that there have been many disagreements with local surveys that have been made.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID], who introduced the bill, which was at the suggestion of the department, and in full accord with what it thought was necessary to bring relief to a very large number of people seriously affected by the rules under which the department was working in connection with these cases.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill. I did not prepare it. I have been working for the enactment of such a measure for about 10 years, or a measure which would cover the exigency that exists for such legislation. Now, after seeking for this kind of legislation for years, after presenting it to the Commissioners of the General Land Office and the Secretaries of the Interior who have come and gone, and to the present able incumbents, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior finally, after much experience in administering the law in existence in regard to surveys and resurveys of public lands and private lands, came to the conclusion that just such an act as this was actually necessary—even expedient. Now, it is a very conservative and inexpensive concession made to a long-felt demand.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office volunteered the information that he had come to the conclusion that a bill should be prepared, and he ordered it prepared in his office, without a single suggestion having been made by me for more than a year previous. He told me that there had been other Members, representing Western States, who had come to his office seeking some such legislation. Now, why is it that this work can not be done by the county surveyor or the State surveyor? It is because this work is of a peculiar character. It requires long experience, and skill resulting from long experience, to perform the work so that it will be of value and so that it will carry conviction to those interested that it is right. As long as the conviction shall not be established that the work done is correct there will be no peace in the particular neighborhood. There has been talk all along here about war measures; this is a war measure in the sense that it is sought to secure peace in the neighborhood, because riots occur, shootings occur, killings may occur in disputes over these lines. We all know about the bitter feuds that have been engendered by disputes over boundary lines of farms in our various States.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not happen in Nebraska, does it?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Some in Illinois.

Mr. KINKAID. It costs the Government nothing at all. The settlers were entitled to have these lands surveyed in the first place. They do not have the land unless they have the lines; their claims or entries can not be identified without corners and lines.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. What do they riot about?

Mr. KINKAID. In disputes over the lines. Now, here is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior justifying this legislation. He says they have no tangible survey. That means that there is no survey on the ground. It means that there is a survey in the General Land Office on paper. It means that in some cases there was a survey originally, but prairie fires and sand storms have obliterated it. In some cases there was never any survey made on the ground because 40, 50, or 60 years ago there were no examinations made by special agents of the department of the work done before the contract was adopted and paid for. Now, in these times, there is an inspection made unless the survey is by the Government surveyor, and there is a strict supervision by the Government, and the surveys are correct, but that was not the case when these surveys were made.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman explain the present law with reference to surveys where you show the department that the survey was never made?

Mr. KINKAID. That will not apply to these cases.

Mr. WINGO. Perhaps the gentleman did not catch my question. If you make a showing that no survey was ever made, does not the law provide for a survey?

Mr. KINKAID. No; not in such a case as this. It does where not more than half of the lands of a township has passed to patent.

Mr. WINGO. That is the resurvey, but I mean where there never was any survey made.

Mr. KINKAID. These are places where a survey was made and recorded, and you could not prove in these cases beyond cavil that no survey was ever made. Generally here and there are to be found evidences of surveys. They did not make some corners, perhaps township corners.

Mr. WINGO. These record surveys contain the regular calls.

Mr. KINKAID. They contain the record.

Mr. WINGO. They contain the regular calls that any State surveyor can take and locate.

Mr. KINKAID. Oh, no. In these cases they only make it where surveyors not experienced and skilled can not find the corners at all, and the Government owes it to these people that a survey be made, for these are all homestead lands. It is a legal fraud on entrymen that there are no corners to be found. They are ready to pay for work to be performed by experienced Government surveyors. I mean experienced in precisely this kind of work.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean to say that you have not any surveyors out there who can take the field notes in the surveyor general's office and take the calls of those notes and locate the corners of a given section?

Mr. KINKAID. It requires great skill, and it is only the Government surveyors, with few exceptions, who have had large experience with such work whereby they have qualified themselves to perform the work to satisfaction, and the Secretary's letter states that that is the fact, and he states that the Government surveyors have the time to do it, and that it will be done at the expense of those asking the relief in this case. They deposit the money in advance. If it is ordered by the court, they deposit the money in the court, and if it is not ordered by a court, they deposit it in the General Land Office, and the Government is at no expense. They are doing the Government's work which the Government years ago paid for but did not have done. They are going to do the work at their own expense and have the work performed this time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I am very much impressed by the statement the gentleman is making, and I know he is familiar with that sort of legislation and the situation out there; but what I want to ascertain is how he will, having these surveys made, dispense with the necessity for having riots out there. Will not the same disputes arise as to the location of the survey?

Mr. KINKAID. Oh, no. Long experience has proved that the people acquiesce in it; they bow to the auspices of the General Government in the work performed by the Government surveyors.

Mr. WALSH. They evidently do not bow to the law of the United States that they shall not kill one another.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw myself from the controversy, and I am satisfied with the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID]. He has convinced me of the merit of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Nebraska in respect to a suppositional case, where 90 per cent of the land is in private ownership and only three-fourths make application for this resurvey, and the three-fourths contribute their proportionate part. In that case who pays the expense, under the bill introduced by the gentleman, of these privately owned lands that are resurveyed in the township for persons who have not petitioned for a resurvey?

Mr. KINKAID. Those who put up the money in the first place; the three-fourths have to put up the money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether the bill is broad enough to compel them to pay the expense of the lands resurveyed for those who have not petitioned for it.

Mr. KINKAID. It covers that completely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman point that language out? I have read the bill, and I do not find the language.

Mr. KINKAID. I think it covers it—I am sure it covers it very fully—with the greatest deference to the diligence of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us take the first section of the bill:

That upon the application of the owners of three-fourths of the privately owned lands in any township covered by public-land surveys, more than 50 per cent of the area of which townships is privately owned, accompanied by a deposit with the United States surveyor general for the proper State, or if there be no surveyor general of such State, then with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the proportionate estimated cost, inclusive of the necessary work, of the resurvey or retracement of all the privately owned lands in said township, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, subject to the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized—

And so forth. The proportionate estimated cost of what?

Mr. MONDELL. Of all privately owned land.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not stated here. The proportionate estimated cost refers to the three-fourths of the petitioners, or such portion of the land as is owned by the petitioners.

Mr. KINKAID. No; there are other lands there. They are Government lands; and it is contemplated that the Government will pay itself for the resurvey of the Government lands, and this in proportion to the cost of paying for the survey of the Government lands. The Secretary of the Interior recognized the justice of the Government paying for the resurvey of the Government lands. That is the relation in which the word "proportionate" is employed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman another question. In the original act providing for the resurvey, where more than 50 per cent in the township was public lands, there was a provision, which is found in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior recommending this bill, providing that no such resurvey or retracement shall be so executed as to impair the bona fide rights or claims of any claimant, entryman, or owner of lands affected by such resurvey or retracements.

There is no such proviso in the bill under consideration. I wish to inquire whether it is the purpose, by reason of the resurvey, to bar the rights of those who do not join in the petition for the resurvey in case their lines are found to be different from what they claimed were their boundary lines.

Mr. KINKAID. Where the title has passed it is incompetent for the Congress to legislate so as to bar any rights. We do not pretend to do that, but this resurveying carries acquiescence and satisfaction to these communities, so that there is no trouble afterwards at all when the Government performs the work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not such proviso be carried in the bill, so as to protect the rights of those who do not petition for the resurvey?

Mr. KINKAID. It would be regarded as superfluous, and it would be; the courts recognize this, the department recognizes it, and the Constitution preserves the right——

Mr. STAFFORD. Which right?

Mr. KINKAID. That is the constitutional right that a man's property can not be taken by legislative act in this way without due compensation, and so forth.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. I will, of course.

Mr. SINNOTT. What effect will this act have upon the claim of a person for the period of the statute of limitation on a mistaken boundary? Suppose the statute has run for the 10-year period, and there is a claim to a mistaken line, will this bill have any effect upon that? Suppose the statute of limitation is 10 years, and there is a claim to a mistaken line——

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; but the statutes differ in the different States. And this bill does not change that in any way.

Mr. SINNOTT. He would still retain his right to set up the statute of limitation as a claim of title?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; under the State law, whatever it is.

Mr. STAFFORD. One further question, if the gentleman will permit. I notice that the bill has not incorporated the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KINKAID. That is, correctly. It has the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, but it is put in line 15 instead of in line 17, and I shall ask to correct that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the amendment now incorporated?

Mr. KINKAID. The amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior is found in the bill in line 15, and it should be in line 17. The mistake was made in the letter written by the Secretary of the Interior, on page 3, third paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment is not incorporated in the bill as reported to the House.

Mr. KINKAID. That is by clerical omission in the printing of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the gentleman intends to move to incorporate that amendment?

Mr. KINKAID. Precisely that which was asked by the Secretary of the Interior except in a different line, to place it in the right line.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any information as to how much additional expense will arise by reason of the Government paying its proportionate part of the resurvey of public lands included in these townships?

Mr. KINKAID. That would be very speculative and would be very presumptuous in me to guess at it, and it would not be good faith to undertake to make any estimate without information. The Secretary says there are means to do this, that this will be all right, and there is no trouble about paying the expense. The expense is very negligible as compared with the appropriations made for surveys and resurveys.

Mr. STAFFORD. How general does the gentleman contemplate this act will be availed of if it is enacted?

Mr. KINKAID. It is only in rare cases of a township here and there in a few Western States where the surveys are, as in my State, none younger than 45 or 50 years old.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I certainly shall not object, but, in order to have the RECORD straight, let me suggest that this bill becomes necessary not by reason of any law but by reason of a regulation.

Mr. KINKAID. That is right.

Mr. MONDELL. And regulations under our Government become the laws of the Medes and Persians, and in order to get around a regulation you must pass a law.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman tell us about that? I am anxious to know.

Mr. MONDELL. The law in regard to resurveys—and I am quite well acquainted with it, because I introduced the bill in its present form—provides that resurveys and retracements may be made whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, necessary to determine the boundaries of the public land remaining undisposed of.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that; but as to the regulations?

Mr. MONDELL. Under that law if there were a single public-land line in a township the establishment of which thoroughly and definitely was necessary in order to make clear the boundary of the public land, that boundary could be retraced under the law, and if there were a sufficient number of those lines in a township, the entire township could be retraced; but the Secretary of the Interior, in order to save himself trouble—not the present Secretary, but a former Secretary—made a ruling, hard, fast, and arbitrary, to the effect that if 50 per cent in a township had passed to private ownership no resurvey would be ordered. It is only a rule. The result of that is that in many cases where resurveys are absolutely essential in order to establish the boundaries of the public lands remaining undisposed of they will not be executed, because more than 50 per cent of the lands of the township have passed to private ownership. Now, the Secretary declines to waive that rule, with the result that, while appropriations have been had for years for resurveys and retracements, they are only made where more than half of the land in the township is still public land, and then the entire township is retraced——

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I agree with the statement I understood the gentleman from Wyoming to make, that it was a departmental ruling rather than any law that determined them in refusing to make resurveys of a township where more than half had passed to patent. I see in the Secretary's letter, however, he says that the 50 per cent restriction originally——

Mr. MONDELL. It was originally placed in a bill which I introduced for some specific resurveys, because we could not get the bill through without putting that restriction in, because the Secretary of the Interior insisted upon it, and then the Secretary comes back and says that the provision which a Secretary insisted upon having become the law, therefore a later Secretary was justified in continuing the rule after it ceased to be the law.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That was the act of 1908?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. But later, in order to cure that situation, I introduced another bill with regard to retracements, under which the Secretary was given the authority, which he now has, to execute retracements anywhere that he believes they are necessary to establish the boundaries of public lands undisposed of. But he declines to do it because of his hard-and-fast rule of 50 per cent.

Now, the situation is this: In some of the public-land States there are townships where, as a matter of fact, some of the lines were never run in the field. They were assumed to be run and a beautiful plat was brought in, but no surveys or marks were made in the field. Those were some of the cases. Other cases are where the surveys were made 30 or 40 years ago, and with the buffalo and domestic stock, and the winds and the storms, and the prairie fires burning wooden posts, the boundaries have been completely obliterated, so that it is necessary to have a retracement. Many retracements are made by local surveyors, but in a great many cases the people decline to accept the judgment of a local surveyor. He is generally employed by one of the parties in interest, and the other party very frequently declines to accept his judgment and opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you not have the county surveyor?

Mr. MONDELL. We have. I was referring to the county surveyor. In a great many cases if the county surveyor tries to make a retracement under the rule and according to the manual, some of the parties other than those who employed him, even some of those who employed him possibly, decline to accept his judgment and decision if it is not entirely satisfactory.

Now, our experience is that in nine cases out of ten people will accept the judgment of a Government surveyor. They know he is entirely unbiased, and that if he makes a mistake it will be entirely unintentional, and that his orders are not to run a new line but find the old line if possible—to retrace it. While in my State, I presume, the Government surveyors have resurveyed a hundred townships, I do not know of a single case where anyone has carried a controversy to the courts. Eventually the people have generally agreed to the lines as retraced, and they will do that in the great majority of cases.

Now, nothing is necessary in this bill to reserve the right of the landowner to go into court and attempt to prove that the retracement as made under this bill is not in fact an accurate retracement of the original survey; and if he can prove that is true and can prove in the court what would be a proper retracement, of course that governs rather than the retracement that is made. And there is not one case in a thousand, I imagine, where any question of that kind would be raised. So this legislation, now answering another question propounded by the gentleman from Wisconsin, in all probability will reduce the expenditure of the Federal Government, assuming that the Secretary of the Interior were to follow the law rather than his rule. Of course, as the Secretary of the Interior has laid down the hard-and-fast rule of 50 per cent, this does lay a slight added burden on the Federal Government, which would not otherwise be laid, because it would bring about the survey of some of the townships where more than 50 per cent of the land is in private ownership. The cost in the running of the years would be comparatively small, would amount perhaps to a few thousand dollars per year, but the benefits would be a very great deal indeed, and settle a great many land controversies which have been brewing for a long time.

Mr. SINNOTT. Is not there this added advantage, that if there are any public lands involved the survey by the county officials would not be binding on the Land Office, but the survey by the Federal officials would be binding on the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true, though a survey by a county official, if he follows the manual, is binding on everybody as much as any resurvey is binding on anyone, until you have a judicial decision, if a controversy arises. The trouble is that in a great many cases the people will not accept the judgment of the county surveyor.

Mr. SINNOTT. If the survey conflicts with the monument, the monument would prevail?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8004) authorizing the resurvey or retracement of lands heretofore returned as surveyed public lands of the United States under certain conditions.

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the application of the owners of three-fourths of the privately owned lands in any township covered by public-land surveys, more than 50 per cent of the area of which townships is privately owned, accompanied by a deposit with the United States surveyor general for the proper State, or if there be no surveyor general of such State, then with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the proportionate estimated cost, inclusive of the necessary work, of the resurvey or retracement of all the privately owned lands in said township, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, subject to the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized in his discretion to cause to be made a resurvey or retracement of the lines of said township and to set permanent corners and monuments in accordance with the laws and regulations governing surveys and resurveys of public lands; that the sum so deposited shall be held by the surveyor general or commissioner when ex officio surveyor general and may be expended in payment of the cost of such survey, including field and office work, and any excess over the cost of such survey and the expenses incident thereto shall be repaid pro rata to the person making said deposits or their legal representatives; that the proportionate cost of the field and office work for the resurvey or retracement of any public lands in such township shall be paid from the current appropriation for the survey and resurvey of public lands; that similar resurveys and retracements may be made on the application, accompanied by the requisite deposit, of any court of competent jurisdiction, the returns of such resurvey or retracement to be submitted to the court; that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations to carry this act into full force and effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment. The committee has an amendment, but it is asked for in the wrong line.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no amendment on the bill.

Mr. KINKAID. Not on the bill, but it is in the report. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be made in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, except that it be placed in line 17, page 2, after the word "lands" and before the semicolon following the word "lands."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. KINKAID. Line 17, page 2, that the amendment be made between the word "lands" and the semicolon following the word "lands."

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 17, after the word "lands," insert the words "in addition to the portion of such appropriation otherwise allowed by law for resurveys and retracements."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the amendment, but it is entirely unnecessary, and I do not know that it is entirely wise. The object of the Secretary in recommending this amendment is to increase his appropriation for this class of work. Under the current law not to exceed 20 per cent of the survey funds may be used for resurveys and retracements. The Secretary evidently wants a fund for this class of work in addition to that 20 per cent, and separate from it. Of course, if such an appropriation is made it would serve to separate these expenditures from the other resurvey expenditures, but the effect of the amendment would be to prevent any surveys under this bill during the present fiscal year unless there was an additional appropriation made. There is not any reason why the 20 per cent of the survey fund that may be allotted for resurvey and retracements should not be used for this class of retracements as well as other classes of retracements. There is not any reason why the two classes of resurveys or retracements should be kept separate as an item of appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. If this bill becomes a law without this amendment they would simply use this 20 per cent that they now have?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. If this were adopted——

Mr. MONDELL. It would be necessary to make another appropriation for this particular work.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question. If this amendment was not adopted, he knows—as, of course, he does know, as he has expressed the opinion—that the expenses of these resurveys will consume entirely the available fund, leaving nothing with which to meet the Government's share as a supplement to the settlers' deposit for resurveying townships where the 50 per cent mark is exceeded?

Mr. MONDELL. I am of the opinion that the 20 per cent is more than will be used for all classes of resurveys. There is now 20 per cent of $400,000. That is $80,000. That is available at this time for resurveys and retracements, and in my opinion it is entirely sufficient for resurveys and retracements for this year, both for this sort of retracements and the ordinary retracements. In that case why should we hold up that sort of retracements until we can make appropriations at the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government does now make these resurveys and retracements under the law?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; where there is only 50 per cent of the land in private ownership.

Mr. FOSTER. And this would only add another class in which now they are prohibited from doing it?

Mr. MONDELL. They are not prohibited; but if there be more than 50 per cent in private ownership, they are not executed. But the moment we pass this law the appropriation for retracements becomes available for this work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be recognized in favor of the amendment. There is 20 per cent of the general fund now available for retracements and resurveys of public lands. It was the intention that there should be available at all times 20 per cent of the general amount voted for resurveys that could be utilized for retracements and resurveys on the public lands where the Government directly was concerned. This bill is one for the benefit of private owners.

Mr. MONDELL. All resurveys are for the benefit of private owners.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; not all resurveys. The direct benefit under the present law is an aid to the Government to relocate the lines of the public lands. This law here is for the benefit of the private owners, and Congress should determine how much we should spend yearly for the benefit of those private owners in the way of resurveys of public lands in these townships where more than 50 per cent of the land is privately owned.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me get it clear in my head. This law, as I understand, simply raises the amount of privately owned land in certain townships where they make the surveys. Now, they do this very thing, as I understand from the gentleman from Wyoming, under the present law.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me illustrate: As I have just stated, under the law the Secretary has the authority to resurvey if 90 per cent of the lands have passed into private ownership. He has fixed an arbitrary 50 per cent. That is a rule; not the law. Now, assuming a township with 50 per cent of the land in private ownership. It may now be retraced and the Government pays all the cost. Under this law if 51 per cent of that township were in private ownership, then the private owners would pay for the 51 per cent and the Government would only pay for the 49 per cent. The Government under the present law pays for the resurvey of private lands as well as of public lands. Under this bill the Government pays for nothing but the resurvey of the public lands, and there is not any reason why those two classes of retracements should be under separate provisions of appropriations. This is a much more satisfactory piece of legislation from the standpoint of the guardians of the Public Treasury than the general law, because under this we pay for nothing except for the survey of Uncle Sam's land, while under the present law we pay for surveying both Uncle Sam's land and the private owner's land.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill primarily is for the benefit of the private owner of formerly Government-owned land. Now, where more than 50 per cent is in private ownership it is proposed that the Government should undertake this work, but the expense should be borne by the private owners, so far as the private-owned land is concerned, and by the Government so far as the remainder is concerned. The Government ought to control as to how much should be voted for the resurveys from time to time. We can not tell how much shall be demanded, but we should always know how much shall be voted for that purpose rather than allow the 20 per cent to be controlled always for the benefit of the private owners.

Mr. KINKAID. I only wish to say that I hope the amendment will be agreed to, in order to keep faith with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is a member of this committee?

Mr. KINKAID. No.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the gentleman was.

Mr. KINKAID. I regret to say I am not on that very fine and active committee.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the gentleman to say that he was offering a committee amendment.

Mr. KINKAID. I said this was a committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Then I should like to ask the gentleman who reported the bill from the committee whether or not the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior was given consideration by the committee?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It was; and when the report was handed in it was an oversight that a copy of the amended bill was not handed in.

Mr. WALSH. It is true that the committee saw no objection to this amendment?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The committee saw no objection to it, and recommended a favorable report of the bill with that understanding.

Mr. KINKAID. Unanimously.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TIMBERLAKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BIRD RESERVATION IN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10612) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, out of deference to the gentleman who is occupying the chair [Mr. RAKER], who therefore is not able to explain the provisions of the bill, I think the bill ought not to be considered to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hopes the gentleman will not object on that account.

Mr. WALSH. And, furthermore, it is a rather important measure, which ought not to be considered by unanimous consent. Therefore I object.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may remain on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I shall object unless it goes to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. I accept the gentleman's amendment if he insists.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming, acceded to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], that the bill go to the foot of the calendar and remain on the calendar?

There was no objection.

LANDS AT YELLOWSTONE, MONT., FOR HOTEL PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 41) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel and other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think some explanation ought to be given as to the reason for making a preferment of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co. to purchase some public land at $25 an acre for hotel purposes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, a branch of the Oregon Short Line Railroad terminates at the border line of the Yellowstone National Park. This is one of the entrances to the park. Thousands of tourists are transported to the park along that line of road. The terminus is in a forest reserve. There is no land there to be acquired in private ownership, and it seems rather necessary that hotel facilities be constructed for the convenience of the traveling public who go into that park. For that reason a bill was introduced permitting the railroad company to purchase from the Government about 126 acres, as I recollect, for hotel purposes. The land is not valuable. In the public market it probably would not sell for $5 an acre. The bill provides that it shall be sold upon appraisement at a price not less than $25 per acre.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a short-line railroad that runs in there?

Mr. EVANS. It is a branch of the Oregon Short Line.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Government taken that over?

Mr. EVANS. The Government has taken over what is known as the Oregon Short Line Road.

Mr. FOSTER. I know; but did it take over this branch line?

Mr. EVANS. I can not say. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. So the gentleman does not know whether the Government, in the operation of this railroad, desires this land for this purpose or not?

Mr. EVANS. No; I could not say as to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do they need such a large number of acres of land?

Mr. EVANS. One hundred and twenty-five acres for track purposes, yard purposes, and hotel purposes at a park is not a great acreage, in my judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. To save my life I can not see why the railroad company should need 125 acres of land there.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Montana is in error as to the number of acres. It is 88.2 acres.

Mr. EVANS. I think it was originally 126 acres, but the amount was reduced by one 40-acre tract.

Mr. FOSTER. How can they use that much land?

Mr. EVANS. The report states that some Y tracks are to be changed in the yard. The railroad runs through a wild country to this national park, and the operation of the hotel is to be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. It seems to me that it is a meritorious proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not familiar with the location of this line. This is the terminus of the railroad?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Close to the national park?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How far from the entrance?

Mr. EVANS. I think it is within a mile or so, or very close to the line. There are three entrances to the park, one from the north, one from the west, and at Cody from the east.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the Oregon Short Line?

Mr. EVANS. This is the Oregon Short Line. People coming from Salt Lake and Denver up that road come to that entrance to the park on the Union Pacific. The Oregon Short Line is a branch of the Union Pacific system.

Mr. FOSTER. Would this give them all the best land there is there, that is owned by the Government and accessible to the entrance to this park?

Mr. EVANS. Individually I could not tell you. I have never been on the ground. This is a part of a forest reserve. I think there are millions of acres of land just like this there. There is an entrance into the park there because the road is built up to that point and it hauls its passengers there.

Mr. FOSTER. This is giving the railroad a monopoly, is it not?

Mr. EVANS. I do not think so. Of course, it is giving a monopoly of the land in private ownership, because the rest of it is public land.

Mr. FOSTER. But that would give them all the land surrounding the terminus of the railroad.

Mr. EVANS. Yes; it would give them 80 acres, or whatever this bill covers.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the gentleman of the opinion that granting that much land to the railroad would at all interfere with the travel to and from the park?

Mr. EVANS. If it was not granted, or if it was granted?

Mr. FOSTER. If it was granted.

Mr. EVANS. It would not only not interfere, but it would encourage travel to the park.

The railroad company is not willing to build a hotel on the public domain. They want to put a million dollars into the hotel for the accommodation of the public. They think they are entitled to the land before they put the money in it. If some one else wants to put a hotel there they could not do so, because they have no title, unless they put it on contiguous land.

Mr. FOSTER. They would be some distance from the railroad.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the gentleman's opinion that this would not interfere with the rights of the public and would give them no monopoly, but that it is merely for the convenience of entry of people into the park?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. In looking over this some time ago I was wondering whether or not the proviso on page 2, line 14—

Provided, however, That any hotel erected on said lands shall be operated by the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., or its successors in interest, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the conduct and operation of hotels within the Yellowstone National Park.

This gives the title absolute in fee to the railroad company. The railroad company may transfer its rights to a transferee, who is therefore not under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior at all, who can handle the hotel as he or they may see fit. I wondered, as it is the entrance to the park and blocks the way for anybody else, whether or not the gentleman would object to an amendment that this condition should be inserted in the patent—that the hotel property, whether run by this company or its successors in interest, should be always under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Interior, and that the provision should be inserted in the patent. That is a provision we have inserted in other patents.

Mr. EVANS. I have no objection, but I think it is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman can see that this is a grant in fee, and the very moment they get the patent they can transfer it to anybody else and the transferee would not be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EVANS. The bill provides—

That any hotel erected on said lands shall be operated by the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., or its successors in interest, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the conduct and operation of hotels within the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. FOSTER. That would put it under the same regulation as the hotels in the park are under.

Mr. EVANS. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should put in any amendment that he thinks makes it clear that the Secretary will always have control over the hotel, but I think it is there now.

Mr. RAKER. What is there to bind the successors?

Mr. EVANS. The law itself.

Mr. RAKER. There is not a thing in the patent with reference to it.

Mr. EVANS. Has the gentleman any amendment to offer?

Mr. RAKER. I did have, but not knowing that this would come up at this moment I have not it here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman permit the bill to remain on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent?

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to its holding its place on the calendar, as I understand the gentleman wants to call it up some time later in the day.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 78) to validate certain public-land entries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 78) to validate certain public-land entries.

Be it enacted, etc., That all entries heretofore erroneously allowed for lands opened to entry under the act approved February 20, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 46), and the act of February 16, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 913), to persons who had previously exhausted their homestead rights, are hereby ratified and confirmed; and any such entry which has been canceled for the reason given shall be reinstated in the absence of conflicts and proceed to patent upon compliance with the law under which the entry was made.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WALSH. I demand a second.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects the entry of 14 settlers upon what is known as ceded Indian lands in northern Minnesota. These lands were originally opened under the act passed in February, 1904, which act provided that they should be sold to persons who would apply under the homestead law at not less than $4 an acre, and the right to take them was put up at auction; anybody that wanted to give any more had an opportunity to bid, and so some of the land was sold for more than $4 an acre. The act provided that in view of the high price the bidders might be qualified, although they had exhausted their homestead right. The result was that many went in and bought these lands and some of them remained unsold. They were swamp lands, and two years later there was an act passed providing for a drainage survey. The lands unsold were withdrawn in order that the drainage act might be executed. Three years later the Indian appropriation act provided that these same lands would be thereafter open to homestead settlers under the homestead law.

The homestead laws as administered by the register and receiver was supposed to be the original act of 1904, which gave them the right to take a homestead, although they had exhausted their rights. The register and receiver accepted filings from 14 settlers who had stated in the original papers that they had exhausted their rights. They were allowed to enter and to make improvements, and they have done so, and the payments were made in installments. Most of these settlers have paid for the land in full at these high prices of from four to seven or eight dollars an acre.

When they made their final proof, or at least one or two of them did, and offered the balance, the last installment, the matter went to Washington, and here the Interior Department discovered that in the law they did not refer to the homestead law under which they were opened in the first place, where they would have been qualified, but said that that must mean the general homestead law, and consequently by that reasoning they arrived at the conclusion that the register and receiver had wrongfully allowed these men to take their homesteads and make improvements and pay for their lands; and the Secretary of the Interior in a letter to me suggested that the only relief was to apply to Congress. The Secretary of the Interior recognized the equity of those cases by suspending adverse action and recommending congressional action. Hence this bill. The Public Lands Committee of the House has unanimously reported the bill, and it is on the calendar. The Senate Committee on Public Lands and the Senate passed a bill identical with this, and the settlers have now been waiting for quite a long time and are in real distress unless their homes can be saved to them. Some of them have paid in full and some of them have paid in part.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The only question involved is this: The original law provided that former homestead entry should not be a bar to a purchase entry.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the usual provision?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The second law passed covering these lands did not contain that provision?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; it simply said, "under the homestead law."

Mr. MONDELL. Although it was undoubtedly the view of the committee that passed it that it would be interpreted as the first law was, which is the usual form of that sort of legislation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. But the department hewed close to the line and held that inasmuch as no reference was made to a former homestead entry, therefore the entryman who had made a former entry was barred.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, this relieves those entrymen and puts them in the same position of the entrymen who entered under the law, in the first place.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; and the register and receiver of the United States Land Office took the same view that the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, all the Government officials believed these men were within their rights until they had paid their money and resided on the land and improved it and the cases came here to the Land Office.

Mr. STEENERSON. They have not only built houses and lived upon the land but they have paid their share of the cost of ditches, costing $7 and $8 an acre, besides.

Mr. WALSH. How did these entries come to be allowed erroneously under the drainage law? Who is at fault for that?

Mr. STEENERSON. The drainage law is an act of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. And these entries were allowed under that act?

Mr. STEENERSON. Only a part of these entries were made under the drainage law of May 20, 1908, and the Secretary recommended that the bill as originally introduced be changed so as to include those as well. That is what is known as the Volstead Act. That provides that the entryman shall pay and that the amount paid shall go to the Indians, whatever it may be, $4 or $5 or $6 an acre, and that he shall also pay the drainage cost imposed under the State law for the reclamation of these lands, and then get title.

The drainage law there referred to did not contain this qualification that the original act of 1904 did, which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] suggested. Therefore the register and receiver assumed they were qualified under the original act that opened this reservation, the act of 1904.

Mr. WALSH. The register and receiver made the error.

Mr. STEENERSON. The register and receiver made the error, as well as the local lawyers, and your humble servant as well. It was supposed that the bill would give these settlers the same rights as those who entered under the act of February 20, 1904, but the wise lawyers in the Interior Department discovered this point after, as has been stated, the men had lived on the land the full time and had made their payments and had complied with the law in every respect.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman stated that $4 an acre was rather a high price.

Mr. STEENERSON. It was for these lands, for the reason that they were swamp lands, and before any of them were fit for anything the State authorities had to lay out ditches which in some cases cost as high as $10 an acre for each tract, and they had to improve the river that was the outlet; and they levied heavy drainage taxes on these lands in addition to the $4 that went to the Indians. The $4 was the minimum sum. Some of them were sold for more than $4.

Mr. WALSH. These were entered as homesteads?

Mr. STEENERSON. It was in this way: They were ceded Indian lands and they were to be paid for, and in addition to paying for them they were to comply with the homestead law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill the bill S. 4555, an identical Senate bill which has been passed by the Senate. That will avoid our having to go back to the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it exactly in the same language?

Mr. STEENERSON. Exactly; word for word. Senator KELLOGG introduced it and had it reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, which is on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not remember whether the House bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it was read. The question is on suspending the rules——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the Senate bill should be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4555) to validate certain public-land entries.

Be it enacted, etc., That all entries heretofore erroneously allowed for lands opened to entry under the act approved February 20, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 46), and the act of February 16, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 913), to persons who had previously exhausted their homestead rights, are hereby ratified and confirmed; and any such entry which has been canceled for the reason given shall be reinstated in the absence of conflicts and proceed to patent upon compliance with the law under which the entry was made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The House bill No. 78 of similar tenor was ordered to lie upon the table.

EMPLOYEES LIABLE TO MILITARY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, July 9, 1918.

The CLERK HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with the provisions of the House of Representatives resolution No. 383, I take pleasure in submitting a statement showing the names, addresses, and character of work of all employees of the United States Shipping Board and the Division of Operations, Emergency Fleet Corporation, who have been given deferred classification.

I shall also submit at the very earliest moment a statement showing the same information relative to all other employees of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The statement is now in the course of preparation.

Very truly, yours,

LESTER SISLER, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. This document will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and lie upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What becomes of these reports of these various departments in reference to these exemptions?

The SPEAKER. They are printed in the RECORD by agreement here two or three weeks ago and they lie upon the Speaker's table, and after all come in they are to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs except the one from the Navy Department.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I hope that committee will report on them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent further to extend my remarks on the water-power bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS FOR LOSS OF LIMBS IN MILITARY OR NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 6421, commonly known as the maimed soldiers' bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6421) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same in the military or naval service of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones of the arm or leg, or of the elbow or knee joints, or where there is an ankylosis of either of said joints, shall receive a pension at the rate of $70 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at the shoulder, or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such a condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the humerus or femur or of the shoulder or hip joint, or where there is ankylosis of either of said joints shall receive a pension at the rate of $75 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the arm or leg, or where there is an ankylosis of any of the joints of said arm or leg, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both hands or both feet, or have been totally disabled in the same or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or joints of either of said arms or legs, or where there is an ankylosis of any of the joints of said arms or legs, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms and both legs, or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or of the joints of either of said arms or legs, shall receive a pension at the rate of $150 per month: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act public or private.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, increasing the expenditures of the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars, and I think a quorum should be present for its consideration, and therefore I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment, in order to enable me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask, where a Member has asked permission to extend and revise his remarks and has not yet done so, under the rule we have adopted to-day can he put a speech of that kind in the RECORD hereafter?

The SPEAKER. Why, if a Member gets general leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD he can extend them any time between now and the 4th of next March.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What I mean is, where a Member has already made a speech and held it out and asked to revise and extend it in the RECORD, can he now drop it in the basket on either Monday or Thursday?

The SPEAKER. Unless there is some time limit, the privilege extends to the 4th of next March.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And he can put it in at any time?

The SPEAKER. At any time you please. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House do now adjourn——

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For what purpose?

Mr. LANGLEY. For the purpose of enabling me to present a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know if, under the rules, I can withdraw my motion, since I know we can not get a quorum, and substitute a motion to suspend the rules and pass the Army nurse bill, which is on the calendar, also, and to which I know there can be no objection, as it only involves a few thousand dollars and justice to 151 heroines of the Civil War who are in need, many of them suffering for the necessaries of life, and who should have been included in the act of October 6, 1917, increasing widows' pensions?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is that?

Mr. LANGLEY. I wanted to know if I can substitute this nurse bill if the gentleman will withdraw his motion to adjourn and the gentleman from Wisconsin his point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already announced that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am sorry to be the innocent cause of interfering with other gentlemen who are waiting to get recognition, but I had hoped that there would be no objection to either bill and that I could get them both through to-day. I will bring them up again after the recess.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, July 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL of Tennessee, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12704) to authorize the importation without the payment of duty of sundry articles for the American National Red Cross, to be donated or used by it solely to or for the benefit of the land or naval forces of the United States or its allies, or for the relief of the civilian population of the United States or its allies, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 757), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 18, 1918.

Bishop Yoshiyasu Hiraiwa, D. D., of Tokyo, Japan, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Maker of heaven and earth, the Father of all mankind, Ruler of the whole nations upon the earth, we come before Thee and assemble in Thy own holy name.

Thou hast trusted great things concerning the human race especially to the hands of this great Nation. We beg Thy special guidance and pray for the wisdom from on high and for mercy. Bless President Wilson and all advisers of him at this most troublesome and critical time in the world's history; comfort and strengthen him in all the things he undertakes to establish the peace and righteousness in this country, as well as in all the countries now concerned. We ask also that Thy blessing be upon Congress, and especially upon this body. Guide them in their deliberations and consideration of the things pertaining to the Nation. Bless and guide all of those who are in authority. Have mercy upon us all and be near us, within us, behind us, and in the midst of us.

We ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us all. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, July 15, 1918, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4555) to validate certain public-land entries.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4723) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House, insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHOUSE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. LANGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4543) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHOUSE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. LANGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4722) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHOUSE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. LANGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7236. An act to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898;

H. R. 8004. An act authorizing the resurvey or retracement of lands heretofore returned as surveyed public lands of the United States under certain conditions; and

H. R. 10818. An act to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram, which consists of only one line, which I ask to read to the Senate. It is dated Sarles, N. Dak., July 18, 1918, and is addressed to myself. It reads as follows:

> We want your support in passing the $2.40 wheat bill over the President's veto.

The telegram is signed "Cypress Farmers' Club, of 93 members, Sarles, N. Dak."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for 15 or 20 minutes. I shall not do so at this particular time while it is out of order, but I hope that I may be given at least 15 or 20 minutes when the morning business shall have been concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. Before it is concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; before morning business has closed.

Mr. GORE. I should like to admonish the Senator from North Dakota that he had better inject his remarks before the morning hour is concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it in order now to address the Senate upon the petition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that, under the unanimous-consent agreement, nothing can be done except such as is provided for in that agreement; but the Chair is of the opinion that by unanimous consent of the Senate Senators may address the Senate when no special business is involved.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply desire to explain this petition, Mr. President, and I ask unanimous consent to do so now.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota allow just one moment for a petition to be introduced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have asked the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me merely for the purpose of presenting a petition. I present a petition, and I ask that it take the proper course.

Mr. President, I desire to ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and also the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], to the fact that this petition, I am informed by a committee of citizens of the city of Chicago, is a mere copy of one which has been presented to the other House and has been printed in the RECORD of the House proceedings. It is asked that this petition be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It would occupy, evidently, what is called a "stick." The signatures to it I do not ask to have printed in the RECORD, but I respectfully ask, if it is in order, that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD. If it is in order, I should like to have that done. If it is not, I will follow the rule. I do not insist on any exception.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois if the petition has already been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LEWIS. I do not know. I will quote very literally. The petitioners state that the Speaker of the House and others presented this petition, and said it had been agreed that it should go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Of that I do not know; but the petitioners ask that it be printed in the RECORD. The petition is respecting Irish freedom.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the petition going into the RECORD, provided it has not already been printed in the proceedings of the other House.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, if this goes in first, I will endeavor to seek to intercept the other, so that it will not be printed twice. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD without the signatures. The petition states that it contains 600,000 signatures.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator from Illinois ask that the names be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LEWIS. No; but I should like that, instead of printing the names, the Senate would allow the words to be inserted as written at the edge of the petition—that it contains 600,000 signatures.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, this is in the nature of a petition of a legislative body? Is that correct?

Mr. LEWIS. It is a petition concerning the recognition for what is spoken of as "Irish freedom" from the viewpoint of those who prepared the petition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. By whom is the petition signed?

Mr. LEWIS. By American citizens, mostly Irishmen, who are citizens of Chicago.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The only reason I asked the question was that this morning I received a petition with the request that it be printed in the RECORD. I will not ask that that be done because of the action of the Senate, and I wrote the parties that the Senate had adopted the policy not to print such matters in the RECORD. I do not myself like to object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not allow this petition to be referred to the Committee on Printing, and then, if it is proper that it should be printed, we can so report?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if it is the idea of the Committee on Printing that this petition should first be referred to that committee to determine whether or not it shall be printed in the RECORD, of course I yield. I know the rule, and I favored it. Later I shall ask to have the petition printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think we might have the petition presented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] read, and then other Senators will know whether it is a similar petition to those which have been sent to them for presentation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to the reading of the petition. I may be in error, but I believe there is an attempt being made to embarrass one of our allies—Great Britain. There are a few traitors in our country calling themselves Irishmen, who have been willing to cooperate with Germany to injure Great Britain and thus injure our own country. A propaganda has been attempted here by Sinn Fieners against our ally, and I am opposed to anything being done by our Government at this time that could be regarded as an assault upon Great Britain. I am afraid this petition will be regarded as an attempt to assail our ally and construed as being in line with the anti-British propaganda just referred to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there may be objections to the petition being printed, in view of the rule we have respecting matters going into the RECORD, and it may be that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is accurate in his wish and in the expression that it should first go to the Committee on Printing to determine as to the question of printing, but I can not allow the expression of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to remain as having any application to any people signing this petition who are residents of the city of Chicago. My city does not hold any traitors; and these Irish people, I can assure the Senate, are as loyal as and are not excelled in their patriotism by any human beings anywhere in the world. If there are others who may be termed "traitors" in the United States elsewhere I do not know, but I should hate to feel that any petition which I presented here carried with it the stigma that could be impugned with the suggestion that the eminent junior Senator from Utah has addressed to some whom I do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Seattle, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation appointing a national day for supplication and prayer for the success of our arms in the present war, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of sundry citizens of Wyoming, favoring the enactment of further prohibition legislation as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Red Lodge, Mont., praying for the creation of a centralized Federal authority to determine and direct the highway policy of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Red Lodge, Mont., and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce and Agriculture of Glasgow, Mont., praying for a Federal investigation of the high prices of gasoline and other petroleum products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Bruce, Wis., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rice County, Kans., praying for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of sundry Lithuanians of Bridgeport, Conn., pledging allegiance and support to the United States during the present war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

ELIZABETH T. WELLS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1930) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Wells, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 552) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 4831) granting an increase of pension to Frank C. Myrick; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4832) to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars and disturbances in Utah Territory from 1849 to 1869, inclusive, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 4833) granting a pension to Susan A. Cline (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4834) granting an increase of pension to William T. Potts (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4835) granting an increase of pension to William B. Lawrence (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4836) granting an increase of pension to Ellen Temperance Smith (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4837) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ross (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4838) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Reitzel (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4839) granting an increase of pension to William Peterson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4840) granting a pension to Harvey C. Myers (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4841) granting a pension to Howard Copeland Little (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4842) granting a pension to William H. Gage (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4843) granting a pension to Flora E. White (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN:

A bill (S. 4845) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth E. Baker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 167) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit illustrative of agricultural progress in the United States at the Pan-American International Farm and Live Stock Exposition, to be held in Jacksonville, Fla., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RETIREMENT OF JUDGES OF TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and I desire at this time to say a word concerning it.

The bill (S. 4844) to provide retirement in certain cases for judges of the United States district courts in the Territories was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have been in some doubt as to the proper reference of this bill. While in general terms it extends the provisions of retiring on salary the judges of Territorial courts complying with the terms, namely, 10 years' service, age over 70, as a matter of fact it applies only to a single case, that of Judge Dole, of Honolulu, who is one of the historic figures of this country. At first I thought of asking that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, but have concluded that probably the best reference would be to the Judiciary Committee.

I can only say that Judge Dole, who is a man, I think, of about 80 years, has returned to the practice of law in competition with the younger members of the Honolulu bar, who are very able, in order to maintain the position that he has in the islands. Judge Dole has served his country well and brought that Territory into a condition where there are no more loyal people, I believe, under the American flag. I think it is due to him that this bill should be passed; and I trust that the Judiciary Committee, to which I ask that it be referred, shall give it early consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to indorse what the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has said with regard to Judge Dole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to read to the Senate—it will occupy about five minutes—a statement from one of my constituents, Swift & Co., packers, of Chicago, which contains some statements of fact which I think ought, in fairness to them, to be embodied in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in reply to matters which have already been included in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under date of July 3, 1918, addressed to myself, they state as follows:

SWIFT & Co.,
Chicago, July 3, 1918.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to call your attention to the fact that Swift & Co. has protested to the Federal Trade Commission that its report on war profits for the years 1915, 1916, and 1917, issued June 29, contains unfair and misleading statements about the packing industry.

In this protest, copy of which is inclosed, we call attention to certain unfounded charges and to unfair statistical comparisons. It is a matter of national concern that a department of the Government, established largely to prevent unfair business methods, should itself issue misleading statements, and attempt to throw discredit on an honestly conducted industry that has met all emergency war demands promptly and completely.

Swift & Co. has nothing to conceal and fears nothing from unbiased investigation of its finances or impartial appraisal of its conduct.

The unusual economic conditions of the past three years have necessarily resulted in larger than normal profits in the packing industry, as in other industries, but this profit can hardly be considered excessive because it has been just as essential as has been the largely increased income of the farmer and wage earner.

Our increased profits have been used to help finance large inventories at exceptionally high prices, and to build at increasing costs extensions and improvements, which are made necessary largely by unprecedented war demands.

After paying 10 per cent dividends to more than 20,000 stockholders out of the 1917 earnings, Swift & Co. found that, even after putting the balance of its profits back into the business, it has had to issue additional stock in order to raise more money to finance operations and to maintain efficiency; it has also had to increase its borrowings from the banks by over $75,000,000, as compared with prewar times. Whereas Swift & Co.'s inventories were about $50,000,000 before the war, they now run in excess of $150,000,000.

We are, of course, not protesting against excess-profits taxation, nor against fair investigation of war profits, but it would be easy to cripple the packing industry by allowing it an inadequate income. A net profit of $2,000,000 to-day goes no further in furnishing a proper return for investors in financing heavy inventories and in allowing for extensions and improvements than a $1,000,000 profit did four years ago.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that the profits mentioned by the Trade Commission were earned prior to November 1, 1917. Since that time the profits on the meat departments of our business have been limited by the Food Administration to 9 per cent of the capital employed, or to about 2 cents on each dollar of sales. Other departments are in competition with manufacturers whose profits are not restricted. Swift & Co. is living up to all Government regulations.

The Trade Commission emphasizes the fact that the aggregate profit of four large packers for the three war years was $140,000,000—a figure that could have been derived by anyone from the published statements of the companies concerned. The commission neglected to mention that this profit was earned on total sales of over four and a half billion dollars, and that it amounted to only about 3 cents on each dollar of sales, thus forming a negligible factor in prices.

Respectfully, yours,

L. F. SWIFT.

Then a telegram which was addressed to Mr. Bracken, secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, a copy of which was also sent to me, dated Chicago, July 1, 1918. If the Senate will permit the telegram to be printed in the RECORD without reading, I will not read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

CHICAGO, July 1, 1918.

Mr. LEONIDAS L. BRACKEN,
Secretary Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.:

Swift & Co. protests against certain unwarranted statements in the report issued by the Federal Trade Commission on war profits in that they give the public a false impression regarding the profits and the conduct of the packing business.

Swift & Co. can justify its profits as not only reasonable but necessary for efficient conduct of the business, to finance large inventories at high prices, and to expand facilities at increasing costs.

The report states that the five large packers have a monopoly of the meat industry and manipulate the market without regard to law. This is a serious charge, unsupported by facts. Swift & Co. is in competition with all other packers, has no control over prices, and the policy of the company is to obey the law.

Packers' profits are unjustly exaggerated by the statement that four large packers made a profit of $140,000,000 during the three war years, as against an average annual profit of $19,000,000 for the three years before the war. This compares a three-year profit with a one-year profit, and the $19,000,000 should have been $57,000,000 to make the comparison just.

It would be fair to the industry if the report had stated that this $140,000,000 profit of four large packers was earned on sales of nearly $5,000,000,000, and amounted to only about 3 cents on each dollar of sales. This profit amounts to only a fraction of a cent per pound of product. In view of these facts the packers can not be justly accused of having "preyed upon the public unconscionably." The Trade Commission's report as a matter of fairness should have explained this, and that it covered transactions prior to establishment of control by the Food Administration in November, 1917. Since that time our profit has been limited to 9 per cent on capital employed in the meat business, equal to about 2 cents on each dollar of sales.

The impression has gone broadcast that license control has been flouted by the packers. Swift & Co. has at all times endeavored to live up to all regulations of the Food Administration both as regards the handling and marketing of food products and also as to profits.

LOUIS F. SWIFT,
President Swift & Co.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry with regard to the petition which he had just presented?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. If Swift & Co. are accurate in their statement that $2,000,000 of profit now amounts to no more than $1,000,000 of profit a year ago, then would it not naturally follow that $2.50 for wheat to-day is not any greater price than $1.25 wheat would have been a year ago?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. The Senator's inquiry and the necessary deduction would follow, that they are not much out of proportion.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 7236. An act to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898; and

H. R. 8004. An act authorizing the resurvey or retracement of lands heretofore returned as surveyed public lands of the United States under certain conditions.

H. R. 10818. An act to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PRICE OF WHEAT—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate having already granted unanimous consent to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to address the Senate, the Senator is now recognized.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] wishes to be recognized; and if I do not lose my place, I should be very glad to defer to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Do I understand that I have to ask unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is getting it for the Senator now. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator will proceed.

Speech begun July 15, 1918.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations upon the President's message vetoing the Agricultural appropriation bill. It is not necessary for me to say what the Senate already knows, that I have done my utmost to secure an increase in the price of wheat. Animated by a sense of duty, I could not consent to do less than my best. Whether I have fought a good fight or not, "I have kept the faith." Perhaps I might add with truth "I have finished my course." But, however that may be, I could not consent to do less than I have done.

I wish to say, also, that respecting the $2.40 per bushel wheat amendment and respecting the effort to increase the price of wheat the Senate has behaved splendidly. It has been animated by a sense of public duty, and I believe has been inspired by wisdom, by justice, and by statesmanship which the future will abundantly vindicate. The Senate took the extraordinary step of suspending the rules in order to adopt this measure of justice. By a majority of 3 to 1 it did its duty toward the American farmer.

I wish to say that the other House also has behaved splendidly respecting this measure. On the last roll call, by a vote of 150 to 106 the House adopted the $2.40 wheat amendment. I think the House, too, was animated by wisdom, by justice, and by a sense of duty which the future will not fail to justify.

To this I wish to add that I hope no Member of either House will lose his seat on account of his vote in favor of this amendment. I hope that no Democratic Member of Congress will lose his seat on account of the fact that this measure was vetoed by a Democratic President. If the next Senate, if the next House, if the next Congress go Republican, it will be due to this veto message. This opinion is based on the assumption that nothing be done to countervail the effects of the message. In any event I hope that no farmer will cast his vote against a Democratic Senator or a Democratic Representative on account of the action—the constitutional action, I may say—of the Democratic President. I feel that I ought to give expression to this hope.

The President of the United States was entirely within his constitutional power when he vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill. Our Constitution has vested that power within the Chief Executive. It was vested as a conservative power. It ought to be, and I assume is always, exercised with extreme care and conservatism.

This principle in our Constitution was borrowed from the English system, but no King of England has vetoed an act of Parliament during the last 200 years. During his 8 years in the presidency, Jefferson did not veto a single measure which had received the approval of Congress; in every instance he permitted the will of the legislature to become the law of the land. I do not know that he is entitled to any special commendation on account of that forbearance.

Mr. President, I respect the partition of power between the three departments embodied in our Constitution. I would be as much opposed to the legislative department meddling with the powers, the duties, and the functions of the executive department as I would be opposed to the Executive meddling with the powers, the duties, and the functions of the legislative department. We ought to respect the boundary established between these two departments, for whenever we disregard that boundary we set our feet in the path which must inevitably lead either to anarchy upon the one hand or to despotism upon the other. When, if ever, the legislative department assumes or absorbs the powers of the Executive, we will have degenerated into an oligarchy or into an aristocracy; whenever the Executive assumes or absorbs the powers vested in the legislative department, we will have centralized and hardened into an autocracy—that form of government against which the civilized world is embattled to-day.

Mr. President, it may be surprising to hear me say that I indorse much that is contained in the President's veto message. I may say without reserve that I approve the general principles, I approve the abstract principles, which the President lays down with so much force and so much lucidity. I can not, however, quite appreciate his application of those principles to the facts of this particular case; indeed, sir, the principles which he lays down with so much clearness have no more application to the amendment fixing the price of wheat at $2.40 than they have to the Draconian Code or to the nebular hypothesis. This I shall demonstrate before I conclude. Between his theory and the facts, between his principles and the situation there is a hiatus which the imagination, with all its facilities for intellectual aeronautics, can not span.

The President in express terms bases his veto upon principle and upon what he is pleased to call "wise expediency." I am obliged to dissent both from the President's reasoning and conclusions as to the expediency of the veto. Mr. President, injustice is always inexpedient. This truth is so plain as to be self-evident; this truth is so broad as to be universal; this truth is so enduring as to be eternal; it admits of no exception.

Mr. President, I heartily approve of the generous, the golden praise which the President lavishes upon the American wheat farmer with such exuberant and artistic grace. Whatever of comfort the farmer can derive from these gracious compliments is his for the having. In so far as fine phrases and charming rhetoric can compensate the American farmer for the loss of $450,000,000 in the year 1917 and for the loss of $700,000,000 in the year 1918, that compensation is the farmer's. My only fear is that such compensation may prove to be "such stuff as dreams are made of."

I repeat, I indorse the tribute which the President showers upon the farmer. The President says that the American farmer does not require "the stimulation of prices" in order to do his duty. That, sir, is true. The President says that the American farmer, inspired by the spirit of patriotism, has filled his granaries to the point of overflowing. Mr. President, I hope that is true. The President predicts that the wheat harvest this year will exceed the last by 250,000,000 bushels. If this dream comes true, 200,000,000 of the increase will be due to favorable seasons and only 50,000,000 to increased acreage. I will not insult the farmer's patriotism by defending it. I will only say that the patriotism of the American farmer does not have to be purchased; his loyalty does not have to be subsidized; his devotion to the flag does not have to be suborned. Upon the American farmer rests the burden of feeding the world during this terrible tragedy; upon the American farmer rests the burden of feeding the peoples of our own country and of the allied and neutral nations; upon the American farmer rests the burden of feeding not only our own armies but the armies of the allies who are to-day battling in a common cause against a common enemy. The American farmer will bear that burden; the American farmer will bear that burden with patience and with patriotism; the American farmer will bear that burden with or without justice.

The farmer will continue to do his duty throughout this terrible crisis without war profits and without peace profits so long as he can endure. The farmer can not continue to produce at a loss any more than he could continue to live in a vacuum.

Mr. President, the farmer, like charity, is long suffering. The farmer, like charity, seeketh not his own, is not easily provoked, thinketh not evil. The American farmer, like charity, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, and endureth all things.

[At this point Mr. ASHURST raised a point of order and Mr. GORE suspended his speech.]

Thursday, July 18, 1918.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, when I was interrupted the other day I was more or less surcharged with the subject. The Senate and the country will never know what an intellectual and rhetorical treat was denied them on account of that interruption, but I still have a few rambling remarks to submit.

As I was saying when the Ashurst rebellion broke out, the farmers will submit to a great deal, and I may add will submit to a great deal of injustice. They will submit in silence and without complaint, but I am far from thinking that this constitutes any justification for heaping up injuries and injustice upon them.

We should not forget that sometimes "the shallow murmur, but the deep are dumb." A sense of injustice is the mightiest dynamic force in the moral universe. That feeling may be long harbored in silence; it may be pent up; it may smolder for ages; but yet it sometimes bursts forth with volcanic violence, destroying thrones and crowns and scepters and powers and principalities like waxen images in a temple swept with flame. We can rely upon the character and the training of our people; we can rely upon their inbred instinct for law and order to protect us against such revolutionary methods and against such revolutionary consequences.

The President in his veto message declared that an overwhelming majority of the farmers regard the administrative price upon wheat as fair and liberal; that an overwhelming majority of the farmers regard the reduction of the price of wheat from $3 a bushel to $2.20 a bushel as fair and liberal. I have often thought that the farmer is the only class of our citizenship who has occasion to feel that his luck is high when he happens to get justice. In his veto message of December last the President declared, with truth, that the farmers complain, with justice, that they are obliged to sell in a restricted market and are obliged to buy in an unrestricted market.

Mr. President, when did the farmer come to regard a situation fraught with injustice as fair and liberal? How could the farmers complain with justice of a system or of a situation which they regard as fair and as liberal? Such a thing is little short of a moral miracle. It is a moral miracle unless something has happened to change the situation, unless something has happened to reconcile the farmers to injustice or rather to remove the injustice.

What has happened to convert a system and a situation, admittedly characterized with injustice, into a system and a situation now hailed as fair and liberal by its victims? Since December last the cost of living has greatly increased; the cost of production has greatly increased; the wages of farm labor have greatly increased; the price of farm implements has greatly increased. The $2 and less which the farmer actually receives for his wheat to-day will buy one-third less than when the price was fixed in August last. The $2 and less which the farmer receives for his wheat to-day will buy 25 per cent less than it would buy in December last, when the farmer complained with justice that he was obliged to sell in a restricted and to buy in an unrestricted market.

The farmer's strength seems to increase with his burden. The farmer is developing an enthusiasm for adversity which "passeth all understanding." The farmer is a good deal like the old man in the Latin fable, who was borne down with the weight of years and infirmities. His burden was too grievous to be borne. He cried out in a loud voice for Death to come and relieve him of his burden. Death responded to the invitation, but upon his arrival the old man told him that he called him merely to push his burden a little farther up on his shoulders. In the light of this fable I can understand how the American farmer has come to regard an unjust system as being characterized with fairness and with liberality.

Mr. President, of course I am obliged to believe, and Senators are obliged to believe, that an overwhelming majority of the actual farmers, the farmers who produce wheat, the farmers who eat their bread in the sweat of their own faces, who have conferred with the President upon this subject, have assured him that the administrative price upon wheat was both fair and liberal; I am obliged to believe that an overwhelming majority of the actual farmers who have communicated with the President upon this subject have assured him that the 80-cent per bushel reduction on wheat was eminently fair and liberal. I have no choice but to believe. Indeed, I could believe without proof that all the political farmers who have conferred or communicated with the President upon the subject have assured him that this 30 per cent reduction below the market price was a realization of poetic justice and of the highest ideals of fairness and of liberality. I mean the agricultural courtiers, whose chief delight is to stir and fan the incense in not unseen censers; I will not say censers swung by sycophants whose footfalls tinkle on the tufted floor. It is no fault of rulers—it is rather their misfortune—that they are ofttimes surrounded by courtiers and by flatterers who speak to them what they imagine will be pleasing to the ear and do not speak the plain unvarnished truth. I can imagine a conversation between one of these courtier farmers and the President upon the administrative price of wheat. I imagine it would run a good deal like a conversation between the Prince of Denmark and the chief of his courtiers.

Hamlet said:

Do you see yonder cloud that's almost in shape of a camel?

Polonius answers:

By the mass, and it is like a camel, indeed.
HAMLET. Methinks it is like a weasel.
POLONIUS. It is backed like a weasel.
HAMLET [without breaking the sentence]. Or like a whale?
POLONIUS. Very like a whale.

If Hamlet had suggested that the cloud resembled a rose, I have no doubt Polonius would have answered, "Mighty lak' a rose."

I imagine that such were the honest responses of these agricultural courtiers to each and every suggestion of the President as to the administrative price upon wheat.

Mr. President, I shall not cumber the RECORD by adducing testimony here to show that at least a respectable minority of the farmers would prefer $3 per bushel for wheat to $2.20 a bushel for wheat, contrary as that may seem to the first principles of human nature. The President may have greater facilities for ascertaining the views and sentiments of the wheat farmers than have the Senators and Representatives from the wheat-producing States; he may have better facilities for ascertaining their views and sentiments than have Senators and Representatives from nonwheat-producing States, who, with enlightened vision, voted for $2.50 and $2.40 wheat. The President may have greater facilities for ascertaining the views and sentiments of farmers than has the National Grange. A committee of the National Grange, which met in Utica last April, adopted strong resolutions indorsing the proposition to advance the price of wheat. That was before injustice had resolved itself into fairness and liberality. The leaders and officials of the farmers' organizations in the great wheat belt have declared their wish and the wish of their constituencies to have the price of wheat advanced in the direction of the market price. I do not know whether they represent the views and sentiments of the wheat farmers or not. I have here now a letter from the farmers' national headquarters, situated here in the city of Washington, sent to me on Saturday last, the day the President's message was published, in which they, with respect and with propriety, review and refute the arguments and the conclusions of the President. Evidently this new moral regimé has not yet brought these farmers within the pale of its jurisdiction.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma allow me an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GORE. I yield for a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should merely like to make a statement in this connection. Last week I met a gentleman who is a farmer in the West. He assured me that he had one farm in Nebraska and one in Montana.

Mr. GORE. Two farms?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; he had two farms—one in Nebraska and one in Montana—of very considerable proportions, one of them consisting of 1,000 acres and the other perhaps of less. I said to him, "I want to know the truth about this situation." I asked him about the price of wheat down to the time when we got into the war, the price last year, and so forth, that we know pretty well about. Of course, it is conceded that the farmers were formerly glad to get 85 and 90 cents a bushel for wheat. I said, "What is the situation now? What does it cost you to produce wheat?" He said to me—and I give it for what it is worth; I know no more about the circumstances than what this gentleman told me, and he is a reliable man—he said, "Any amount that we can get over a dollar a bushel for wheat is a profit on wheat to-day." He may have been all wrong, but I give that to the Senator from Oklahoma as a mere matter of information.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GORE. Not for the present, if the Senator from Missouri will pardon me.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, when the wheat committee met here in Washington last August there were a few representatives upon that committee who were qualified to speak for the wheat farmer and for the wheat section. The president of the Agricultural College of North Dakota made a survey of his State, and upon his responsibility reported to that committee that the cost of producing wheat in North Dakota last year was $2.19; but the farmers have been receiving under Government control only $2.05 and $2.10 in that State. A similar study was made in the State of Minnesota, and the report was that the cost of producing wheat last year was $3.01; and yet they were obliged to take $2.10 and $2.15 for wheat in the State of Minnesota.

It may be true that the Senator from Florida fell into the arms and listened to the siren voice of one of these agricultural courtiers who whispered sweet suggestions in the President's ear.

Mr. President, the day this Government broke the price of wheat it was selling for $3.06 in Minneapolis. From that time forward it has been selling for $2.17 in Minneapolis—a reduction of more than 80 cents. Cotton to-day is selling for 30 cents a pound. Is the Senator from Florida willing to vote to reduce the price of cotton to 22½ cents a pound?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I want the Senator from Florida to answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GORE. I do so unless it prevents an answer from the Senator from Florida.

Mr. REED. I want to ask as to the price of cotton when the war began.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that that has anything to do with the price of wheat; but I am perfectly willing to concede that if there had been no regulation of the price of wheat we might have been paying $3.50 or $4 a bushel for it to-day.

Mr. GORE. Does the Senator from Florida justify a reduction in the price of wheat?

Mr. FLETCHER. I give the Senator what information I have on the subject. That is all.

Mr. GORE. Will the Senator give me what information he has as to any views or opinions he may entertain about reducing the price of cotton?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not feel that we ought to fix the minimum price of wheat at $2.50 with the light which is before me. I think the price now is a price that is altogether favorable to the farmer; that is my impression. Of course, I am open to conviction about it, and if the facts justify the price of wheat going to $2.50 a bushel, I am perfectly willing that it shall do so. There is no man on this floor who feels a keener sympathy and a more sincere interest than do I in the people who by their toil produce the necessary foodstuffs. I do not believe that they are asking for this increased price. That is my impression. I have talked with a good many of them, and they have not said so to me.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, $2.50 a bushel for wheat is 20 per cent less than the market price when the Government broke the price. Twenty-four cents a pound for cotton would be 20 per cent less than the prevailing price. Would the Senator vote for such a reduction on cotton? There was a meeting in this city on yesterday of the agricultural commissioners of a number of Southern States, a meeting of representatives of farm organizations from a number of Southern States, to protest against meddling with the price of cotton and the breaking of the price of cotton. I assert now that they will find in the Senator from Florida an unyielding champion of their position. Nobody will obtain power to reduce the price of cotton with his vote or with his consent. I only ask, Mr. President, that the Senator apply the same principle and the same protection to the wheat farmers that he will extend to the cotton farmers of the State of Florida. I ask to have printed in the RECORD, in rebuttal of the hearsay testimony of the Senator from Florida, a letter coming from the farmers' national headquarters in the city of Washington.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before that is printed, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that I could cite at least one disinterested witness who was before our committee—the distinguished Prof. Warren, of New York. In taking the census of the farmers of New York he found that, with the price fixed by the administration, almost one-half less acreage was planted to wheat in 1918 than was planted in 1917, due to the high cost of producing wheat. I think the Senator from Oklahoma will remember that testimony.

Mr. GORE. I remember Dr. Warren's statement quite well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the printing in the RECORD of the letter referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I stated on Saturday last, and I now reiterate, that I indorse the principles laid down by the President in his veto message. They are, I think, beyond challenge; they are not open to controversy. I think it was Carlyle or Ruskin who said—at any rate, I shift the responsibility—that "platitudes are sometimes luminous." I promised, Mr. President, to demonstrate that the President's principles, sound as they are, had no application whatever to the amendment which he was vetoing. I suggested, indeed, that they had no more application to that amendment than they would have to the Draconian Code or to the nebular hypothesis; indeed, I may say less than to the Draconian Code, because that was rather rigid and inflexible; and that was the President's chief complaint.

Now, on this point, Mr. President, I do not merely assume the burden of proof, and I shall not merely content myself with presenting the preponderance of evidence. I shall not content myself with proving my contention beyond reasonable doubt. I shall demonstrate it beyond any sort of doubt. Even the courtier, though he dally, shall not doubt.

Mr. President, what were the principles and the objections laid down by the President? First, that inelastic price provisions were unwise and undesirable. That is a self-evident truth.

Mr. President, the tables I print go back to the year 1902. They show the price of wheat paid to the farmer. The comparison of these tables will show that the year the war began wheat was bringing 98.6 cents per bushel, and that it has advanced to $2.09 per bushel. This is the price, as I understand, of No. 1 wheat, of which there is very little.

The cotton figures show that in 1914 upland middling cotton brought 12.5 cents per pound—that figure, in fact, being the highest for three years, and much higher than the figures for 1915, which were 7.3 cents per pound. The table shows that in 1917 cotton had advanced from 7.3 cents to 17.3 cents. It is to-day bringing in the market from 31 to 32 cents, and is commanding an even higher price. It will be seen that cotton has increased over the 1915 price more than 400 per cent, while wheat has increased but little more than 100 per cent, a difference that does not represent the depreciation in the purchasing value of money.

If the price of wheat is to be regulated downward, then cotton must come in for its share of regulation, and I warn the Senators from the cotton States that they will not escape the same kind of destructive regulation as has been visited upon the wheat farmers. I warn them of the fact that Mr. Hoover possesses exactly as much power to regulate cotton as he does to regulate wheat. Indeed, there is even a greater power, because the law does fix a point below which he can not force the price of wheat without violating the express language of the statute. No such limitation exists in the law with relation to cotton. I would not be misunderstood. The right to regulate the price of wheat was never vested in Mr. Hoover. Congress never intended him to exercise any such right, but we did give the right to license the dealers. Mr. Hoover has exercised that power so as to compel the dealers to pay but one price, which he fixes, and in this way he fixes the price of wheat. He can, of course, by a similar process, fix the price of cotton. The tables I refer to are as follows:

Mr. President, perhaps I ought to say that I am quite as much opposed to the Government hammering down the price of cotton, although I think it is now engaged in that enterprise, as I am opposed to the Government hammering down the price of wheat. The two policies stand upon exactly the same principle, and that a false principle.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me to make one statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with the price of cotton, we can not expect otherwise than that it should approach a high level. In the first place, in producing cotton you can not use machinery to any very great extent. You can get machine plows to some extent, and you can do a little work in the cotton field with plows, but there has never been any machine invented which could pick cotton. That has got to be done by human fingers. The people who usually produce the cotton crop of the South are not now there; they can not be found there. You can not employ labor because the labor does not exist in that vicinity. The people who are needed in the cotton fields have gone elsewhere—into the munition plants, the manufacturing plants, and so forth. The women and children will have to do a large part of gathering the cotton crop; but when it comes to the employment of labor, you must pay men $5, $6, $7, and $8 a day, because they are offered those wages in the cities, where the shipbuilding, the munition work, and all that sort of thing is going on. So that it is not possible, in the first place, to produce the quantity of cotton which we have been accustomed to produce. In the next place, when cotton is gathered and ready for the gin, it has cost the farmer many times more than it ever cost him before.

So far as the long-staple cotton is concerned, in Florida the area is necessarily greatly reduced, and I am informed by people living in States adjoining mine that people who had, for instance, 100 plows, as they term them down there, in producing cotton last year were reduced to 15 or 20 plows this year, because they could not get the labor to work the farms. The cotton produced in Florida, however, is not the middling cotton to any great extent. The chief cotton production there is long-staple or sea-island cotton. I am informed by the Trade Board that they have just recently authorized the importation of 80,000 bales of sea-island long-staple cotton from Egypt, and that comes in competition with the product down there, which is now being produced under the adverse circumstances and conditions which I have described. That is the situation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator is belaboring himself to demonstrate a self-evident truth. Nobody can answer the Senator's arguments. They are absolutely conclusive as to cotton, and they are equally applicable and as absolutely conclusive as to wheat. There is a scarcity of labor in the South; there is a scarcity of labor in the West; wages have advanced in the South; wages have advanced in the West. The cost of producing cotton has undoubtedly greatly increased; the cost of producing wheat has equally increased. It happens that a larger number of boys qualified under the physical test in the wheat-producing States than in any other States, and particularly in the Southern States, where the negro population exists—a larger number and a larger percentage of farmers have been drafted for military service than in any other calling.

There are two facts, however, as to which the Senator was in error. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] suggests, circumstances alter cases. The Senator's ox is cotton, and he does not want it gored. I agree with him. I say that there were two statements on the part of the Senator as to which he was unwittingly in error. He says the farmers can not and will not produce so much cotton as formerly; that they have been obliged to reduce their acreage of cotton. The cotton acreage is about 10 per cent more this year than last. Last year it was 35,000,000 acres, while this year it is 38,000,000 acres. Last year the crop was eleven and a quarter million bales. This year the estimated crop will be more than 15,000,000 bales. So the farmers have found ways and means largely to increase their production. But I do not gainsay either the Senator's arguments or his conclusions as to the unwise economic policy, and I will add the unwise ethical policy, of making the cotton farmers of Florida take less for their commodity than it is worth in the market place. I agree with the Senator. I have a statement which I shall print in the RECORD, prepared by the market commissioner of my State, showing the average farm and the average acreage that a farmer can tend of cotton, corn, and wheat. They show that the farmers' net profits in Oklahoma this year on corn will average $624; the cotton profits will average $375; and on wheat $96—a king's ransom—golden unprecedented profits—idyllic farmers—a little more and the wheat farmer will find himself in the anointed, self-sacrificing dollar-a-year class. I do not know from what State the illuminating witness whom the Senator quotes hails from. It might be possible to find some cotton farmer who has two farms in the South who is expecting a position at the hands of the President, who might insist that 22 cents would be an adequate price for cotton, but that would not convince me, nor would it convince the Senator from Florida, nor would it convince the millions who are engaged in the production of cotton.

In his message the President expressly declares that he vetoes the measure both upon the ground of "principle" and on the ground of "wise expediency." I shall survey and analyze both grounds. Let me now state in substance the principles upon which the President vetoed the measure. I shall insert the message at the close of my remarks. First, he says that inelastic price provisions are unwise and undesirable. That is a self-evident truth. The President says that arbitrary price levels made without regard to normal market conditions are unwise and undesirable. A Ricardo come to judgment! The President says that no element of rigidity should be injected into this situation. That is also a self-evident truth. The President says that flexibility ought to be preserved, so that it will be possible at every stage, and in view of each experience, to readjust the price so as to be fair alike to producer and consumer. "Plato, thou reasonest well!"

The law under which the President fixed the price of wheat for the current year is section 14 of the food-control act, approved August 10 of last year. Section 14 answers all of the President's requirements. It has a sufficient degree of elasticity and of flexibility; it is innocent of any "element of rigidity." The existing law fulfills the President's ideal; it answers all his exactions. It is perfection realized.

Mr. President, the amendment which the President vetoed was section 14, copied sentence for sentence, word for word, syllable for syllable, letter for letter, and mark for mark, and I may say grammatical error for error, with two exceptions. The existing law makes the basic grade of wheat No. 1 northern spring—an ideal grade, which few farmers, if any, produce. The amendment which the President vetoed made No. 2 northern spring the basic grade. It substituted the figure "2" for the figure "1." Did that destroy any flexibility? Did that abrogate elasticity, so much to be desired? Did that petrify discretion?

What was the other solitary change in the existing law which answers so well the President's ideal as to flexibility and elasticity? The provision that the guaranteed price for 1918 shall be not less than $2 at the principal interior primary markets. The amendment which the President vetoed on account of its rigidity provided that the guaranteed price for 1918 should be not less than $2.40 a bushel at the principal interior markets heretofore designated by the President, and at such interior markets as he might hereafter designate.

We preserve his discretion as to that, remembering his penchant for discretion.

The existing law says not less than $2.00; the vetoed amendment said not less than $2.40. The figures $2.00 were changed to $2.40. The first naught was converted into a four; only that and nothing more. We purposely preserved the words "not less than," knowing that phrase to be the source and fountain of discretion, knowing it to be a reservoir of flexibility and elasticity. There was no desire, there was no purpose, to take any liberties with Sampson's locks.

The existing law says not less than $2; it establishes that as the sea level, and above and beyond that level gradations can be established and ordained according to the President's pleasure.

The amendment which he vetoed would have established $2.40 as the sea level above and beyond which gradations might be ordained and established in accordance with the President's discretion. I repeat, we purposely preserve that phrase word for word, so that there could be no question as to the flexibility, no question as to the elasticity, and no suggestion that we were undertaking to handicap administrative discretion and substitute rigidity for flexibility. In the time when the doctrine prevailed that the king could do no wrong mistakes, when they chanced to occur, were attributed to a minister and not to the monarch. I am bound to believe that the President in the midst of the great variety and the pressure of official obligations and duties was obliged to rely upon some adviser. I do not know how otherwise to account for such a misapprehension of the measure to which he was applying the coup de main.

Mr. President, this point is not open to doubt; it is not open to debate; it is not open to controversy; but I am not yet content. I shall unseal the eyes even of the wayfarer. I shall show by concrete illustration that the dead amendment was not only almost but was altogether as flexible as the living law. Of course that does not quite make out a case of "unintentional homicide." I shall ask to print as a part of my remarks the President's proclamation, issued on February 21 last, fixing the price of wheat for the current calendar year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. I want to show how the amendment could have been and how I supposed it would be administered. In this proclamation the President fixed the price at the various interior markets and established the gradations. At Salt Lake, at Spokane, and at Great Falls, Mont., he established a price of $2 per bushel. That was the irreducible minimum; he could not under the law pay less than $2 per bushel; but there he begins with his gradations. The price, fixed in his proclamation, at San Francisco was $2.10; at Galveston it was $2.20; at Fort Worth it was $2.09; at Oklahoma City it was $2.05; at Wichita it was $2.08; at Kansas City and Omaha it was $2.15; at St. Louis it was $2.18; at Minneapolis and Duluth it was $2.17; at Chicago it was $2.20; at New York it was $2.28. I shall not name all of the wheat markets.

Now, then, let us admit that those gradations are divinely inspired, if you please; let us admit that those ratios are sacred and that none but an infidel would lay profane hands upon them. Here is what I suppose would happen under the amendment which the President vetoed: At Salt Lake City, Spokane, and Great Falls, I suppose he would establish the irreducible minimum, $2.40; at San Francisco, $2.50; at Galveston, $2.60; at Fort Worth, $2.49; at Oklahoma City, $2.45; at Wichita, $2.48; at Kansas City and Omaha, $2.55; at St. Louis, $2.58; at Minneapolis and St. Paul, $2.57; at Chicago, $2.60; at New York, $2.68; reestablishing, of course, each and every gradation upon this new sea level, without even an irreverent thought of variation—their sanctity could have been preserved inviolate—touch not Saguntum!

Mr. President, it is as clear as the desert sun at noontide that there is no suggestion, no vestige, no "element of rigidity" in the amendment which the President vetoed because of alleged rigidity. The amendment made no change or shadow of choice in the flexibility or in the elasticity of the existing law. It is this conspicuous and undoubted fact which excites wonder as to the President's misapprehension concerning the language and effect of the amendment to which he administered the death blow.

Mr. President, I not only agree as to the principles laid down by the President, but I agree as to the reasons which he assigns for entertaining those principles. The President says that the flexibility of the existing law and administrative method should be preserved so as to "render possible at every stage and in the light of each experience a readjustment which will be fair alike to producer and consumer."

Mr. President, among all the wise utterances of the President of the United States he never gave utterance to a wiser truth than that. Let us see. Flexibility ought to be preserved so that the price could be readjusted in the light of new experience. I believe it was on the 31st of August, 1917, that the President issued his proclamation fixing the price of wheat for the harvest of 1917 at $2.20 a bushel at Chicago. On the 21st of February, 1918, the President issued his proclamation fixing the price of wheat for the current year at $2.20 at Chicago. There should be a readjustment of price in view of each new experience. What sort of experience?

Mr. President, it is known of all men that the cost of producing the present wheat crop is from 30 to 40 per cent more than was the price of producing the crop in 1917. I call Mr. Swift to the witness stand. He says that $2,000,000 to-day will not pay for the same amount of cost of production that $1,000,000 would pay for in the year 1917. He further insists that in the light of this new experience his greater returns are justified, and he justifies Mr. Hoover, of the Food Administration, for allowing him such generous and golden profits under his benignant régime. If the cost of the packing business has increased, that not only justifies but in morals it necessitates an increase in their returns; and I insist that there should not be one standard of profits and patriotism for the packers and another standard for the farmers who produce wheat or cattle.

We had before the Agricultural Committee this spring actual farmers, who testified that they were losing from $40 to $80 per head on steers, and that they were losing from $1.50 to $2 a head on lambs; and Mr. Cotton, who is Mr. Hoover's chief of the meat division, and Mr. E. Dana Durand, the assistant chief, both solemnly declared before the Agricultural Committee that the farmers and producers were losing money alike on cattle and on sheep; and yet Mr. Swift believes that an increase in the cost of production justifies an increase of the return. That is self-evident, and the only question is as to the measure of the increased return. The President avers that the wheat amendment was vetoed because it was inflexible, and that he preserves potential flexibility in order to readjust the price in the light of new experience; yet with a cost—I will not say 100 per cent greater, as Mr. Swift said—30 to 40 per cent greater there is no readjustment in the price of wheat. There is a rigidity that is appalling.

Mr. President, if the price of $2.20 at Chicago for wheat in the calendar year 1918 is high enough, then the price of $2.20 at Chicago in 1917 was too high. If the price at $2.20 for wheat at Chicago in 1917 was not too high, then the price at $2.20 for wheat in the year 1918 is not high enough.

There is no escape from the horns of this dilemma.

There has been a great deal of experience. There has been an increase in the cost of production, and, according to the President's infallible doctrine—I say "infallible," for it can not be assailed—there ought to be a readjustment of the price of wheat upward in accordance with the President's self-evident principles.

Let me revert to this: The President said last December that the farmers complained, and with justice, of selling in a restricted and buying in an unrestricted market. There are two ways in which to remedy that injustice; the one is by advancing the price of what the farmer sells, the other is by reducing the price of what the farmer buys. The Congress of the United States, acting within its constitutional province, decided to adopt the former remedy. It advanced the price of wheat, not up to the market price but in the direction of the market price. The President vetoed that amendment. There is only one other remedy left, and that is the reduction of the price on all the necessaries and on all the comforts which the farmer buys from 30 to 40 per cent below what the price was in August, 1917. I confess that I do not favor that remedy. This would embark upon a general scheme of price fixing, one of the oldest blunders known to the sons of men. It has been tried times without number, not so often in this enlightened age as in the half-enlightened ages of the past. I find instances of price fixing as far back as the reign of Hammurabi in ancient Babylon, 2,250 years before Christ. I find it in Athens, the most enlightened state of antiquity. Diocletian tried it in 301. He had all the discretion and all the power that can be vested and concentrated in a human being. He issued an imperial edict fixing prices on a thousand articles, not on wheat alone. He undertook to go through. He fixed the price on everything from knitting needles up and down. The historian records that the edict wrought infinite mischief. The producers were not satisfied with the price and declined to produce. The worst thing that can happen to the consumer is for the producers not to produce a surplus, for when that happens the consumer is the first to suffer and the producer is the last to suffer.

The warring nations have tinkered with this price-fixing project. France fixed a price on wheat that was unsatisfactory to the French peasants. They shook their heads and reduced production. England fixed a price on dairy products that was unsatisfactory to the dairymen. They butchered their milk cows—a distinct social and economic loss. Germany, with her autocratic power, fixed a price on wheat, rye, barley, and oats that did not correspond with their respective values, and the German peasants fed their wheat and their rye to live stock and marketed the barley and the oats.

I have never been able to account for this strange infatuation in regard to price fixing. The first legislative assembly that ever met in America, the first legislature of Virginia, adopted a food-control act which might serve as a model for the existing law. Surely we tread the same paths our fathers have trod. Price fixing, squaring the circle, and inventing perpetual motion are three fallacies and three follies which it seems will never lose their spell over the human imagination. I do not believe that merely because the Government has touched the pocket in which the farmer puts the proceeds of his wheat, that that is any justification for touching the pocket in which he puts the proceeds of his corn, or any justification for touching the pocket in which he puts the proceeds of his cotton.

Mr. President, the only remedy which has yet been tendered to the farmer was to increase by legislative action the price of his wheat, which was too low. That has been vetoed because the act was alleged to be too rigid. The President, as I have said, has stated an unanswerable argument in favor of preserving the flexibility of the law in order that readjustments may be made in the light of new experience; and yet I say to Senators that the ground of expediency urged by the President for his veto makes impossible the exercise of this flexibility in behalf of the farmers. The only readjustment that is possible under this argument is a readjustment downward, not upward. It is desirable, of course, to preserve the flexibility, so that if new experiences justify an advance to meet increasing costs, an increase can be made.

The President vetoed this amendment, both on the ground of principle and of expediency. I have shown that his principles have no application to the amendment itself. I will now show why his reasons based upon expediency do not, in my judgment, accord with a sound or a wise public policy.

Mr. President, what is the other set of reasons, apart from those of principle, urged by the President for vetoing this amendment? First, that it would necessitate an increase in the price of wheat in Canada; second, it would oblige the allies to pay the higher price for wheat; third, it would increase the cost of living; and, fourth, it would necessitate an advance in wages. The President assigns these four reasons of so-called "wise expediency" for vetoing the wheat amendment.

A legislative advance in the price of wheat he alleges was subject to all these objections, and these objections he alleges in justification of his veto. Do they justify the veto? Do they establish the unwisdom, the inexpediency, of a legislative advance? Do they not equally establish the unwisdom and inexpediency of an administrative advance? Why all this ado about rigidity and elasticity? Do they not write the legend of despair above the door of every wheat farmer in America, "Abandon hope"?

Can an administrative advance in the price of wheat be made in the light of these insuperable objections, against these reasons of "wise expediency"? Would not an administrative increase in the price of wheat equally necessitate an advance in the price of wheat in Canada? Would it not equally oblige the allies to purchase wheat at the higher price? Would not an administrative increase in the price of wheat increase the cost of living? Would it not necessitate an advance in the current wages of the country? Is there any kind of incantation by which an administrative board can advance the price of wheat and escape those inevitable consequences? If those consequences are sufficient to justify the veto of a legislative advance in price, will they not be omnipotent to control the administrative discretion if an advance in price be urged upon administrative authority?

So that, while the President's reasons are sound as to preserving the flexibility in order that prices can be readjusted either upward or downward as the occasion, necessity, and justice may require, yet he has placed himself in a situation where he can not advance the price of wheat, no matter what the new experiences may be, without disregarding those reasons.

Mr. President, I do not agree that the President's reasons are sufficient. It is always pleasant to agree with the President; it is painful not to agree with him; but it is not possible for any one man always to agree with any other man. Patrick Henry declared that different men often see the same subject in different lights. That is most fortunate, for if all men should see the same subject in the same light, and should that by any chance happen to be the wrong light, this might involve the world in irretrievable disaster. By the presentation of different views and the exchange of opinions it is possible to detect and to eliminate error and to ascertain or approximate the truth. This is the chief virtue and the chief value of free discussion.

I say that to my own judgment—it may be my fault—the grounds of expediency upon which the President vetoed this measure do not commend themselves as sufficient. They either prove too little or too much. They either prove that as an impossible thing this is necessary or else they prove that a necessary thing is impossible. What a dilemma! I will review the last of his reasons first. The President says that if Congress should increase the price of wheat to $2.40 "there would inevitably ensue an increase of the wages paid in practically every industry of the country." That proposition does not prove itself. It is the chief boast of Mr. Hoover that he has reduced the price of flour from $16 to $10.50 a barrel. Of course it is a very different sort of flour; but there was undoubtedly a decline of several dollars per barrel upon flour after the advent of the last harvest and Mr. Hoover. I do not recall, however, that the wages in any industry of this country underwent a corresponding decline. I do not recall that when flour was reduced $6 a barrel there was a like reduction of 40 per cent in the current wages of the land. I have not known that the price of flour and the rates of wages are connected by any indissoluble bonds which unite them like the Siamese twins. If flour could be reduced 40 per cent without reducing wages, it looks to me as if wheat might possibly be advanced 15 or 20 per cent without occasioning any advance in wages. But I will not insist upon that point. In order to simplify the issue I will admit that an increase in the price of wheat would necessitate an increase in the rate of wages. I had not previously suspected that the administration was opposed to increasing wages.

Since the war began there have been three or four thousand threatened strikes. Wages have been advanced on every hand, not only by private employers; the Government itself has set the pace and blazed the way. I am making no protest. But the President argues that if he had approved the Agricultural bill with the wheat amendment it would have increased the price of flour $2 per barrel. Well, let us admit that. The average wage earner in this country has four and a half members in his family. The average consumption of flour in ordinary times is one barrel per capita. That would necessitate an increase of $9 in the average wage earner's bread budget during the whole year. It would necessitate an increase of about 3 cents a day in his wages. The laboring man who had been getting $3 heretofore would have a right then to insist upon $3.03; if he had been getting $6 he would have a right to insist upon $6.03; or if he had been getting $12 a day, as many do—and I rejoice that that is so—he would be entitled to receive $12.03. This is the frightful increase in wages which would have ensued had the farmer been allowed this small measure of justice which the Congress, the constitutional custodian of the public purse, sought to extend to him.

Mr. President, I do not know any reason why the President could not by administrative action prohibit, if necessary, this enormous increase in wages of 3 cents a day. There would be just as much authority in law for fixing a level for wages as there is to fix an absolute price—I distinguish it from a minimum price—upon wheat. I do not think that the President would advocate such a policy.

Mr. President, when the price of wheat was fixed in Minneapolis last August it was selling as high as $3.06. It went down to $2.17—I speak generally. What would be thought of a governmental policy which would undertake to reduce the wages of a laborer in Minneapolis who was receiving $3.06 a day down to $2.17? Is there a man in America so reckless as even to suggest such an experiment? What would be thought of a Government which would undertake to reduce the wages of a Minneapolis laborer from $6.12 down to $4.34, or to reduce the wages of a laborer in Minneapolis from $12.24 down to $8.68? To mention such a folly is to condemn it. The proponent of such a folly would be a fit candidate for the madhouse. Is there any reason based upon principle, "wise expediency," justice, or policy that will justify the Government reducing the price of wheat in Minneapolis from $3.06 to $2.17 per bushel that would not equally justify the reduction of wages in Minneapolis from $3.06 to $2.17 per day? What intellectual alchemy makes one of these actions wise and the other unwise? What moral alchemy makes one of them right and the other wrong? The laborers are organized and the farmers are unorganized. The farmers do not threaten to strike; they never order a walkout. I have sometimes inclined to the belief that if this administration acknowledges any dictator, that dictator is organized labor. The administration seems to stand in as great dread of organized labor as all other classes seem to stand in dread of the administration. Organized labor was the first to learn that it could look and live. But, sir, may I be so bold as to suggest that all reigns of terror look a good deal alike to me.

The President declares that the advance in the price of wheat would aggregate the farmers $387,000,000 this year more than they will receive under the existing law. Well, I will accept those figures. I do not care to challenge them. The amount is utterly immaterial. Mathematical quantities have no place and no value in a moral equation; the problem is not one of mathematics but of morals; the issue is not one of economics but of ethics.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Oklahoma says he does not challenge those figures.

Mr. GORE. I do not mean by that that I admit their accuracy.

Mr. STERLING. How can it be figured that 900,000,000 bushels of wheat, at 20 cents additional per bushel, will make an additional amount of $387,000,000? As I figure it, it would be not exceeding $180,000,000.

Again, if I may ask the Senator, how much would 20 cents a bushel additional for wheat add to the cost of flour, it being understood that 4½ bushels of wheat are required to make a barrel of flour?

Mr. GORE. That used to be the estimate, but I think 4 bushels or less make a barrel now.

Mr. STERLING. How can it be said that 20 cents a bushel on 4½ bushels of wheat that enter into a barrel of flour will make the additional cost of a barrel of flour $2?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I said I did not challenge the figures, because that argument of the President rests upon economic grounds; it rests upon industrial grounds; it rests upon financial and fiscal grounds.

There is another consideration upon which this whole question turns; and I will state a concrete case to demonstrate to the Senator why, under the circumstances, I think it rests upon ethical and not economic grounds. Let us take a concrete case. We will say that a farmer living in Maryland produces this year enough wheat to make a barrel of flour. Under the amendment which the President vetoed he would have received $2 more for this wheat than he will now receive under the existing law.

Now, let us say that a laboring man here in Washington buys the barrel of flour made from the Maryland farmer's wheat. This laboring man will be able to purchase this barrel of flour for $2 less than he would have been obliged to pay had the President approved the wheat amendment. This vital, this crucial fact is admitted on all hands. The President's veto message obliges the Maryland farmer to take $2 less for his wheat than he otherwise would have gotten under the amendment; it enables the Washington laborer to buy a barrel of flour for $2 less than he would otherwise have paid. This is the vital question, this is the crucial question in this whole controversy. Whose $2 is this? Whose $2 is this with which this great Government is sporting as it were a child's plaything? To whom does this $2 of right belong? Who has the best right to the $2 involved in this controversy between the farmer and the laborer? The farmer produced the wheat by his toil in sunshine and in shower. He had the highest title known to the sons of men; the highest, the most indefeasible title that can exist to property. It was the fruit of his own toil. What title is more sacred than that? The Government to which he owes allegiance and which owes him protection has taken that $2 away from that farmer without consideration and without recompense and has transferred it to the laboring man living here in Washington, without payment and without cost, as a gift, as a gratuity.

The Government has taken from one sovereign citizen of this Republic who had earned it $2 and has given it to another citizen of the Republic who had not earned it and has no title to it except for the misguided generosity of this Government, which owes equal protection to the life, to the liberty, and to the property of these two equal citizens. One of the supreme objects of human government is to protect, not to create, a situation in which one man can get without earning what another man earns without getting. I believe this is the first instance in our history where the Government of the United States has taken private property for private use without the owner's consent and without compensation. It may not be the last. In such a precedent misguided radicals may one day pretend to find the raw materials of a red revolution. If this Government has the right to take $180,000,000 worth of property away from the wheat farmers without compensation, it has the right to take $387,000,000 away from them without compensation. If this Government has the right to take $387,000,000 worth of property away from the farmers without compensation, it has the right to take all the property of all the people without compensation—without that just compensation which the Constitution requires and undertakes to secure. Conservative editors and conservative politicians who applaud this act of qualified confiscation may come to rue the day and rue the deed if another law of compensation should ever assert its sovereign sway. What greater right has this Government to confiscate the property of the wheat farmer than the Bolsheviki and the red guard have to confiscate the property of the Russian bourgoise?

Mr. President, I can not agree to the other argument advanced by the President as one of the grounds of expediency upon which he has vetoed this measure. He states that the allies would be obliged to purchase wheat at the advanced price had he approved the measure. I think that is true. I do not know whether our allies expect, I do not know whether they would insist, that the American farmer should furnish them wheat at 80 cents a bushel less than it is worth. I do not know what official, I do not know what department, of this Government has any right, legal or moral, to bind the American farmer to furnish the consumers of the United States or to furnish the consumers of the allied countries wheat at 80 cents less than market price. But, Mr. President, I waive those considerations merely with the mention. I do not know that if it be necessary to the winning of this war to furnish wheat to the allies at less than the market price I am willing to do that. If it be necessary to the winning of this war to furnish wheat to the allies at $2 per bushel, I am willing to do that. Mr. President, if it be necessary to the winning of this war to furnish wheat to the allies without money and without price, I for one am willing to do that; but, Mr. President, I do believe that if it must be done, then this great sovereign Nation, the most opulent nation upon the globe, this Government, organized society itself, should assume and should absorb the loss and should not visit that loss upon the most defenseless and the most indispensable class of our citizens. This Nation is not a mendicant; it is not an almstaker; it does not have to rely either upon charity or upon confiscation. It is a sovereign Nation vested with the highest attributes of sovereignty and with all the powers requisite to self-defense. The Government can lay taxes without limit; the Government can sell bonds without limit. I think that this Government ought to raise the revenue for the waging of this war by the imposition of taxes and by the sale of bonds and not by anything which savors of confiscation.

Mr. President, to my mind it has always been one of the chiefest virtues of our constitutional system that this great sovereign Nation could not take private property, even for public use, except upon the payment of just compensation; I have always deemed it one of the chiefest virtues of our constitutional system that this great sovereign Republic could not take private property for private use under any circumstances or upon the payment of any compensation whatever; I have always thought it one of the chiefest glories of our constitutional system that this Republic, in its collective and in its sovereign capacity, did not have the power to strip the ragged shirt from a street urchin's back without that urchin's consent save only for public use and upon the payment of just compensation; I have always thought it one of the chiefest glories of our constitutional system that this sovereign and majestic people, able to defend itself, could not strip a ragged shirt from the street urchin's back for any private purpose whatsoever; and yet, Mr. President, if this Government takes wheat for 80 cents a bushel less than it is worth and turns it over to the American consumer, turns it over to the American wage earner, is not that taking private property for private use?

Mr. President, this price-fixing policy violates the fundamental laws of economics and introduces economic anarchy and economic mobocracy. This is true, in my opinion, and is a sufficient reason for resisting an embarkation upon this perilous tide in these perilous times.

Mr. President, I remember that one of the most brilliant epigrams which ever emanated from the pen of the President was this: "Equal justice is the heart of democracy." This was in a message addressed to a conference of laboring men in Minneapolis. That sentiment is much more than a brilliant epigram; it is an analysis of justice itself, the most sovereign of all the virtues, either human or divine.

Mr. President, under the food-control act the elevator men have been allowed a profit twice as large as the profit they received before the assumption of control by the Government; the millers, according to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, which I have here, are receiving fabulous returns upon their investment even under Mr. Hoover's régime. In 1914 the millers received 8.9 per cent return upon the capital invested, a little less than 9 per cent, while in 1917, they received a return of some 37 per cent, an advance of 300 per cent in the return upon their capital. Perhaps it is less now. Yet the farmers have been obliged to take 30 per cent less for their product than it is worth. Is that "equal justice"?

The packers have been allowed to receive a return of 9 per cent on their meat output and a return of 15 per cent upon the by-products, while the farmers have been obliged to sell them cattle and sheep at less than the cost of production. Under Government control their returns have been fabulous. "Unto him that hath shall be given." On the second day of the current month of July the price of copper was advanced 2½ cents per pound. The previous price was 23½ cents per pound, while the present price is 26 cents per pound, an advance of a little more than 10 per cent on the price of copper. If that were necessary, if that were justifiable, I do not complain, for there is as little excuse for confiscating copper as there is for confiscating cotton; and yet during the same month an advance in the price of wheat to rectify in some measure the evil of which the farmers complain with justice has gone to its death. Is that "equal justice"?

Now, the Government has taken over the railway systems of the country. This has been justified, or rather urged, as a war necessity. The railroads have been guaranteed the average return for the last three years preceding their taking over, the most remunerative years in all their history. I think the railroads ought to have a just and reasonable return. Whenever the Government takes private property for public use the compensation ought to be just. I believe the return to the Burlington road under the present arrangement is about 26 per cent per annum on all of its capitalization, water, and what not. Mr. President, upon the diminished return from the farmers' wheat his Government obliges him to pay out of those diminshed returns an income tax, if his returns exceed the exemption. Out of those diminished returns, diminished by the hand of his own Government, the farmer is obliged to aid in guaranteeing the Burlington Railroad 26 per cent per annum whether earned or not. Is that "equal justice"? Is that the "heart of democracy"?

Within the past few months the wages of railway employees of this country have been advanced something like $300,000,000 a year. I do not complain of that; the advance may have been not only justifiable but necessary. I do not think that we ought to enslave the railway employees of this country, but they have been given an increase of $300,000,000, while an increase earned by the farmer upon his wheat of $387,000,000 has been denied. Is that the "heart of democracy"?

The Secretary of the Treasury, at El Paso, declared that the railway employees were now "his boys," and that nobody should be suffered to kick them around. Nobody ought to have either the power or the disposition to kick any set of free-born American citizens around in this Republic. I do not know that the farmers would enjoy the patronizing compliment that they were anybody's "boys." I think that nobody should have either the power or the disposition to kick the farmers around.

I reiterate, Mr. President, my agreement with this wise, this statesmanlike, this philosophical utterance of the President, that "equal justice is the heart of democracy." The French Revolution was carried on in the name of liberty, equality, and fraternity. Victor Hugo said that meant infantry, cavalry, and artillery. It has been blazoned abroad that we are waging the present war in the name of liberty, humanity, and democracy. All our public policies should be worthy of those lofty protestations. We should make universal our renunciation of the Kaiser's creed that "might is right."

APPENDIX.

[From the Washington Post, July 13, 1918.]

VETOES $2.40 WHEAT—INCREASES COST OF LIVING TOO MUCH, WILSON TELLS CONGRESS—CALLS FARMERS PATRIOTIC—NEED NO STIMULATION OF $387,000,000 TO SERVE NATION IN CRISIS—FLOUR AT $12.50 A BARREL WOULD DISTURB THE WHOLE WORLD—PRESENT PRICE-FIXING METHOD SATISFACTORY, PRESIDENT DECLARES—HOUSE EXPECTED TO PASS AGRICULTURAL BILL TO-DAY WITH PRICE ELIMINATED.

Increase of the guaranteed minimum price of wheat to $2.40 by legislative rider caused President Wilson yesterday to veto the annual Agricultural appropriation bill. The veto message reached the House late in the afternoon. Representatives from States in the wheat belt immediately set about organizing in an effort to pass the bill over the President's veto, but as there was no quorum, the vote was deferred until to-day. It is generally expected, however, that the appropriation bill will be repassed with the price-fixing provision eliminated.

Some Senators from wheat-growing States were disposed yesterday to urge the Senate to pass the bill over the President's veto, while others suggested that the wheat-price amendment might be added to the $11,000,000 emergency agricultural bill, to which is attached the prohibition amendment.

WOULD AFFECT CANADIAN PRICE.

In his message President Wilson emphasized that the proposal to raise the price of wheat in this country would cause a corresponding advance in the price of Canadian wheat and so would add materially to the already high cost of living. The President emphasized that according to estimates the proposed increase of 20 cents a bushel in the price of wheat would add $2 to the cost of a barrel of flour, making that necessity sell for $12.50 at the mill, instead of $10.50 as at present. As the anticipated 1918 wheat crop will be 900,000,000 bushels, "this increase," the President said, "would be equivalent to the immense sum of $387,000,000."

The veto message follows:

"I regret to return without my signature so important a message as H. R. 9054, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919,' but I feel constrained to do so because of my very earnest dissent, from the point of view of principle as well as wise expediency, from the provisions of that part of section 14 which prescribes a uniform minimum price for No. 2 northern spring wheat of $2.40 a bushel.

DISSENTS ON PRINCIPLE.

"I dissent upon principle because I believe that such inelastic legislative price provisions are insusceptible of being administered in a way that will be advantageous either to the producer or to the consumer, establishing as they do arbitrary levels which are quite independent of the normal market conditions, and because I believe that the present method of regulation by conference with all concerned has resulted in the most satisfactory manner, considering the complexity and variety of the subject matter dealt with.

"It is evident that the present method of determining the price to be paid for wheat has had the most stimulating effect upon production, the estimated crop of spring wheat for this year exceeding all high records in a very remarkable and gratifying way. By an overwhelming majority of the farmers of the United States the prices administratively fixed has been regarded as fair and liberal, and objections to it have come only from those sections of the country where unfortunately it has in recent years proved impossible to rely upon climatic conditions to produce a full crop of wheat, and where, therefore, many disappointments to the farmers have proven to be unavoidable.

NOT REQUIRED BY FARMERS.

"Personally, I do not believe that the farmers of the country depend upon the stimulation of prices to do their utmost to serve the Nation and the world at this time of crisis by exerting themselves to an extraordinary degree to produce the largest and best crops possible. Their patriotic spirit in this matter has been worthy of all praise and has shown them playing a most admirable and gratifying part in the full mobilization of the resources of the country.

"To a very greatly increased production of wheat they have added an increased production of almost every other important grain, so that our granaries are likely to overflow and the anxiety of the nations arrayed against Germany with regard to their food supplies has been relieved.

"The administrative method of agreeing upon a fair price has this very great advantage, which any element of rigidity would in large part destroy, namely, the advantage of flexibility, of rendering possible at every stage and in view of every experience a readjustment which will be fair alike to producer and consumer.

"A fixed minimum price of $2.40 per bushel would, it is estimated, add $2 per barrel to the price of flour; in other words, raise the price of flour from the present price of $10.50 to $12.50 at the mill, and inasmuch as we are anticipating a crop of approximately 900,000,000 bushels of wheat, this increase would be equivalent to the immense sum of $387,000,000.

ALL ALONG THE LINE.

"Such an increase of the price of wheat in the United States would force a corresponding increase in the price of Canadian wheat. The allied Governments would, of course, be obliged to make all of the purchases at the increased figure, and the whole scale of their financial operations in this country, in which the Government of the United States is directly assisting, would be thereby correspondingly enlarged. The increase would also add very materially to the cost of living, and there would inevitably ensue an increase in the wages paid in practically every industry in the country. These added financial and economic difficulties, affecting practically the whole world, can not, I assume, have been in contemplation by the Congress in passing this legislation.

"(Signed) WOODROW WILSON."

FIXING GUARANTEED PRICES FOR WHEAT.

By the President of the United States of America: A proclamation.

Whereas, under and by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved by the President on the 10th day of August, one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, it is provided among other things as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, as a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act approved August eleventh, nineteen hundred and sixteen. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment, and differences in price for the several standard grades in the principal primary markets of the United States, adopting number one northern spring or its equivalent at the principal interior primary markets as the basis. Thereupon, the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guarantee within the period, not exceeding eighteen months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of nineteen hundred and eighteen shall be based upon number two northern spring or its equivalent at not less than $2 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets. This guaranty shall not be dependent upon the action of the President under the first part of this section, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May first, nineteen hundred and nineteen."

Now therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof, do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in said section; and, in order to make effective the guarantee by Congress for the crop of nineteen hundred and eighteen and to assure such producers a reasonable profit, I do hereby determine and fix, and give public notice of reasonable guaranteed prices for No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalents at the respective principal primary markets as follows, to wit:

Chicago, Illinois, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel;
Omaha, Nebraska, two dollars and fifteen cents ($2.15) per bushel;
Kansas City, Missouri, two dollars and fifteen cents ($2.15) per bushel;
St. Louis, Missouri, two dollars and eighteen cents ($2.18) per bushel;
Minneapolis, Minnesota, two dollars and seventeen cents ($2.17) per bushel;
Duluth, Minnesota, two dollars and seventeen cents ($2.17) per bushel;
New York, New York, two dollars and twenty-eight cents ($2.28) per bushel;
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, two dollars and twenty-seven cents ($2.27) per bushel;
Baltimore, Maryland, two dollars and twenty-seven cents ($2.27) per bushel;
Newport News, Virginia, two dollars and twenty-seven cents ($2.27) per bushel;
Charleston, South Carolina, two dollars and twenty-seven cents ($2.27) per bushel;
Savannah, Georgia, two dollars and twenty-seven cents ($2.27) per bushel;
Portland, Oregon, two dollars and five cents ($2.05) per bushel;
Seattle, Washington, two dollars and five cents ($2.05) per bushel;
San Francisco, California, two dollars and ten cents ($2.10) per bushel;
Los Angeles, California, two dollars and ten cents ($2.10) per bushel;
Galveston, Texas, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel;
New Orleans, Louisiana, two dollars and twenty cents ($2.20) per bushel;
Salt Lake City, Utah, two dollars ($2.00) per bushel;
Great Falls, Montana, two dollars ($2.00) per bushel;
Spokane, Washington, two dollars ($2.00) per bushel;
Pocatello, Idaho, two dollars ($2.00) per bushel;
Fort Worth, Texas, two dollars and nine cents ($2.09) per bushel;
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, two dollars and five cents ($2.05) per bushel;
Wichita, Kansas, two dollars and eight cents ($2.08) per bushel, and that the guaranteed price for the other grades established under the United States grain-standards act approved August 11, 1916, based on said price for No. 1 northern spring wheat at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, will assure the producers of wheat produced within the United States a reasonable profit; the guaranteed prices in the principal primary markets above mentioned being fixed by adopting No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalents at the principal interior markets, as the basis.

For the purposes of such guaranty only I hereby fix the guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets above mentioned for the following grades of wheat, to wit: No. 1 northern spring, No. 1 hard winter, No. 1 red winter, No. 1 durum, No. 1 hard white. The guaranteed prices at the respective principal primary markets aforesaid of all other grades of wheat established under the United States grain standards act approved August 11, 1916, shall be based on the above guaranteed prices and bear just relation thereto.

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1918, and offered for sale before the first day of June, 1919, to such agent or employee of the United States, or other person as may be hereafter designated, at any one of the above-mentioned cities, which are, for the purposes of this act, hereby declared to be the principal primary markets of the United States, and provided that such producer complies with all regulations which may be hereafter promulgated in regard to said guaranty by the President of the United States.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this twenty-first day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-second.

[SEAL.] WOODROW WILSON.

FARMERS' NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
Chairman Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and
Hon. ASBURY F. LEVER,
Chairman House Committee on Agriculture.

GENTLEMEN: In view of the President's veto of the Agricultural appropriation bill on account of the provision therein guaranteeing a minimum price of $2.40 for wheat, we ask you to take steps to have this question brought up for consideration immediately on its own merits. We feel that the President's veto of $2.40 wheat is based upon a misunderstanding, and that when the facts are brought to his attention he will be most ready to secure adequate recompense for the farmers.

In his veto message the President states that 900,000,000 bushels of wheat are anticipated. This is 100,000,000 bushels less than we have been assured by the Department of Agriculture, and we know that there will be nothing like 900,000,000 bushels of wheat raised next year unless the price is made higher than $2.20. We have received this morning a letter from Mr. John C. Lawrence, a big wheat raiser of Spokane, Wash., in which he says:

"I have just returned from our farm and find our crop close to a failure, five bushels to the acre being the probable yield. Thousands of acres will never be harvested and thousands more will yield but a bushel or two to the acre. This is in a locality more seriously affected, where a veto of the measure would be decisive as to farming operations there another year in a great many cases. Last year was a poor crop in the entire inland empire, which comprises eastern Oregon, eastern Washington, and northern Idaho. This year the yield will not be to exceed two-thirds of last year. Next year there will be considerable acreage practically abandoned by farmers who have lost money both years who will be unable to continue farming operations another year. The price of $2.40 wheat now would help out quite a little this year, and would do much to obtain credit necessary to putting in a crop next year.

"It will be a serious error if this bill does not become a law. Those who are advising the President to veto certainly do not grasp the situation. The increased acreage on which we must depend for increased production will come in that character of land referred to capable of producing a large amount of wheat in favorable conditions. Montana has practically a complete failure. Southern Alberta is burned up. This, with the inland empire, will mean 100,000,000 bushels or more in loss of wheat to the allies. Alberta wheat is now higher than the prices fixed in the United States."

The farmer is patriotic, but he doesn't insist upon having a monopoly of patriotism. He can not afford to raise wheat or any other crop at a loss. As Mr. Lawrence states in his letter, the farmer will not raise wheat another year unless he is going to make a reasonable profit, just exactly as organized labor would not be regarded as unpatriotic in refusing to work for half of the cost of living. The President's suggestion that a fixed minimum price of $2.40 per bushel would add $2 per barrel to the price of flour is based upon a misapprehension of the method of dealing with the situation.

The United States Food Administrator recently wrote us that the British Government purchases grain from America and other places at the market price prevailing on the day of purchase. This is turned over to the millers at a price which will allow the miller to sell the flour at the mill door at a trifle less than $7.50 per barrel. Parliament made an appropriation of nearly $200,000,000, which it is expected will make it possible for one year for bread to be sold, as at present, at a fixed price of 18 cents for a 4-pound loaf, 9 cents for a 2-pound loaf, and 5 cents for a 1-pound loaf. Some such action can and should be taken in this country instead of asking the farmers to produce at a loss. Unfortunately neither the Department of Agriculture nor the Food Administration have the information upon which to base an estimate of the cost of producing wheat nor have they a policy to increase production. On a recent date the Secretary of Agriculture wrote us in regard to data on the cost of producing wheat:

"This question presents many complications and difficulties. The cost varies widely from section to section and from season to season, depending upon yields, climatic conditions, and other important factors. It would be exceedingly difficult, therefore, if not impossible, to secure data which would be accurate for all sections of the country. While the department has obtained some information on the subject, it is not adequately representative, and I would not be willing to have it appear as an expression of the views of the department regarding the cost of producing wheat."

We asked Food Administrator Hoover whether the Food Administration had any policy for meeting the food needs of our own country and our allies, and he replied, in substance, that they have not as far as production is concerned. It is putting it mildly to say that the farmer has been singled out for an intensity of financial sacrifice which neither organized labor nor organized capital is invited to share. In the statistics of income for 1916, published by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, it is shown that only twenty-four hundredths of 1 per cent of the agriculturists of the country received in that year a net taxable income of over $4,000 (single men $3,000), while nearly 2 per cent of saloon keepers were in this class.

It is perfectly true that a large proportion of the wheat needed for ourselves and our allies can be raised at price of $2.20—some of it even for $1.50. But it is unfair to ask that three or four hundred million bushels be raised at a loss to the farmers. Farmers who make big profits raising wheat will pay excess profits and income taxes and be glad to do so. Have we any right to commandeer without payment the services of farmers who can not make money at wheat at $2.20 or at less than $2.40? That is substantially what the failure to grant the minimum price of $2.40 amounts to unless the Government will ascertain the cost of production for every wheat raiser and pay him the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. This is the only just alternative to a minimum price of $2.40 for wheat.

We hope that you will take steps at once to bring this suggestion to the attention of the President. It is unfair to impugn the loyalty of the farmer and to stimulate the criminal action of the privileged business interests of the country, which are making billions out of this war and are now persecuting the farmer by implying that the farmer is unpatriotic if he insists on making a fair living and refuses to produce at a loss. Would the honest and sincere servants of democracy now in Congress continue to serve if they did not receive any salaries?

Yours, truly,

BENJAMIN C. MARSH, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to make a request? Knowing that the Senator has obtained consent to address the Senate, at the conclusion of his remarks I ask the Senate to allow me, say, five minutes to address myself to a report or statement in the public press this morning upon a question I may say that does not touch the wheat question. I ask the Senate after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota to reserve me perhaps five minutes.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the question of the production of and a fair price for wheat, both to the consumer and the producer, has been so thoroughly and so ably discussed by Members of this body that I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into that discussion. The Senate of the United States accepted, I may say, the judgment of those who presented the facts to the Members of this body. The President's veto of the Agricultural bill has also been ably discussed by the able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and by my distinguished colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER], and I wish to say, Mr. President, although I did not have the privilege of being present to hear the speech of my colleague, that I have read it, and I indorse every word he said upon the subject. I also indorse what the Senator from Oklahoma has so ably said, but if I may be permitted to answer one suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] as to the increased cost of producing cotton, let me say to the Senator from Florida that while I believe what he said relative to cotton is absolutely true, I also wish to assure him that the same increase in the cost of production has taken effect with reference to wheat and other commodities.

I simply wish to cite one instance. In the western portion of the country grain is thrashed in the shock. In normal times thrashing costs the farmer from 8 to 10 cents a bushel. The man who furnishes the thrashing machine also furnishes the help and furnishes the board, and thrashes the grain for a certain price per bushel or a certain price per hour. Last year, I believe I am safe in saying, it cost the farmers of my State on an average not less than 20 cents a bushel. This year the thrashers are not willing to set a price per bushel, but they ask so much per hour, and while in normal times, in peace times, we could get a crew of men and a large machine to work for $15 or $17 per hour, I was told last week by men who were engaged in that business that they would have to charge from $30 to $40 per hour, which means not less than 30 cents a bushel, and in many instances it will cost the farmer 40 cents a bushel to have his grain thrashed. The Senator from Florida can see from this one illustration what the increased cost is to the producer of grain.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the crew? Is it composed of the men and the machine that do the thrashing?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; and a sufficient number of teams to haul the grain to the machine.

Mr. FLETCHER. How many men?

Mr. GRONNA. I should say about 30 men, and about 10 or 12 teams.

Mr. President, as I have said, this subject has been so ably discussed by the two Senators whom I have named that I should not perhaps take a single moment of the time of the Senate to further discuss it were it not for the fact that I received this morning the telegram which I read a few moments ago and which I shall read again. It is addressed to me and is as follows:

SARLES, N. DAK., July 18, 1918.

We want your support in passing the $2.40 wheat bill over the President's veto.

THE CYPRESS FARMERS' CLUB,
OF 93 MEMBERS, SARLES, N. DAK.

I received that message at 10.30 this morning. Sarles is a small village located on a branch of the Great Northern Railroad within a few miles of the Canadian line. I know of no place in the United States where the people are more patriotic and where they are more interested in the outcome of the war than in this little community.

The people of this community have given their sons to their country's cause; they have gone in large numbers to the field of battle, and I can say for them that they are willing to sacrifice every energy and every dollar at their command in order that this war shall be won; but, Mr. President, necessity compels me to tell the truth, and the truth is that the price which has been fixed for wheat by the Food Administration and by the Chief Executive is at this time not a compensatory price.

It is certainly not my purpose to criticize the Chief Executive simply because he has seen fit to veto the Agricultural appropriation bill for the reason that that bill contained the provision fixing a minimum price of $2.40 for wheat, but, Mr. President, I feel constrained to dissent from his judgment. I wholly disagree with him.

Mr. President, on the 12th day of July the President of the United States vetoed the Agricultural appropriation bill. In his veto message, amongst other things, he said:

I feel constrained to do so because of my very earnest dissent, from the point of view of principle as well as of wise expediency, from the provision of that part of section 14 which prescribes a uniform minimum price on No. 2 northern spring wheat of $2.40 per bushel.

I dissent upon principle, because I believe that such inelastic legislative price provisions are insusceptible of being administered in a way that will be advantageous either to the producer or to the consumer, establishing, as they do, arbitrary levels which are quite independent of the normal market conditions, because I believe that the present method of regulation by conference with all concerned has resulted in the most satisfactory manner, considering the complexity and variety of the subject matter dealt with.

Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of, or with the idea of, criticizing or finding fault with the President of the United States because of his veto of the Agricultural bill. The President has exercised a constitutional right, but I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the President and the county the fact that I disagree wholly with his conclusions.

The objections which the President urges are based upon reasons which are not founded upon facts. I ask, Is it wise or expedient to fix a maximum price at a time when this article of food is so badly needed? Is it wise, I ask, to fix the value of the farmer's products at a price which will not stimulate production?

Of course, everybody knows how difficult it is to prove that all the farmers of the United States, or even a majority of the farmers of the United States, are satisfied with the price fixed by the administration. It is difficult, because it is impossible to get all the farmers together, and the farmers can only be represented or misrepresented by men at the head of their organization, or by men who are supposed to represent them in an official capacity.

Speaking for myself, I believe that a majority of the farmers of the United States are dissatisfied with the present price of wheat. I know that in the State which I in part have the honor to represent the farmers are dissatisfied with conditions as they exist at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator permit the Chair to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought it would be courteous to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the morning hour will have expired at 2 o'clock, and thereafter no further business under the unanimous-consent rule, in the opinion of the Chair, may be transacted. The Chair regrets the necessity of making that ruling; but the unfinished business would technically come before the Senate at that time and could not be taken up under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say that I think the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when I asked unanimous consent, either at that time or later, to proceed for 10 or 15 minutes. That unanimous consent has been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair only made the suggestion to the Senator because he wanted to be as courteous as possible. The Senate, the Chair thinks, will have to adjourn automatically under the original unanimous-consent agreement at 2 o'clock. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the unanimous-consent agreement refers simply to morning business? It does not say "at the conclusion of the morning hour," but we can continue the morning business; and, while it would automatically be closed and the unfinished business would come up at 2 o'clock, it has been the custom of the Senate to take up at any time morning business, which consists of the introduction of petitions, the presentation of reports of committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, and so forth. The agreement is that we shall proceed with the morning business. It does not say that we shall close morning business at 2 o'clock, at the close of what is known as the morning hour, but only when we complete whatever morning business the Senate may wish to consider. I wish to say that my own view of the matter is that morning business could, just the same as on any other day, be considered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regrets very much that he will be compelled to rule that morning business as such can only be transacted during the morning hour. If transacted at any other time, it is not morning business within the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement. The Senator will have an opportunity when the Senate meets on Monday to continue, but the Chair thinks——

Mr. GRONNA. I may not be here Monday; but I am sure that the country and the people of the country will live although I may not have an opportunity to make this speech. I will say to the Chair, however, that I do not agree with his conclusions, although I shall make no objection to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is extremely sorry that the views of the Chair are not in accord with those of the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I think I can find plenty of instances to show that there is no regular time set for morning business; but if there is morning business to come before the Senate, whether it is 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock, it can be transacted. I believe that is the custom of the Senate. However, I shall be glad to accept the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair say to the Senator that there are other Senators who desired also to speak this morning, and the Chair informed them the Chair would rule that it would be impossible for them to do so after 2 o'clock? Therefore, the Chair trusts the Senator will understand that the ruling is not directed at him.

Mr. GRONNA. I appreciate that, Mr. President. I shall close by saying that I am sorry that I have to disagree with the conclusions of the President of the United States as stated in his message in vetoing the Agricultural bill. I am sure that if he had used his own keen judgment and not based his conclusions upon the estimates that necessarily must have been furnished him by some one, because no President of the United States, even in times of peace, can go into the details of these complex questions, but must depend upon his subordinates for data and estimates upon the questions involved, his conclusions would have been different.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the morning business is concluded, and the Senate stands adjourned.

Thereupon (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order heretofore entered, until Monday, July 22, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 18, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, look down from Thy throne of grace with compassion upon a sorrowing world, now engaged in the most sanguinary struggle that the world has ever witnessed.

Thousands are dead; thousands dying; thousands maimed for life. On the one hand, a bloodthirsty foe seeking to destroy the most hallowed principles; on the other hand, men striving to uphold those principles which Thou hast taught us to love and cherish.

Our Nation's heart and the hearts of our sister nations associated with us are bleeding in sorrow and grief.

Draw very near, O God, with Thy pitying love, to the fathers, mothers, wives, children, and friends who are suffering anxiety for their precious ones; especially those who are mourning for their dead and dying.

Comfort their hearts with the thought that theirs is a supreme sacrifice for humanity.

Hear us, O God, and answer our prayer in the name of Him who gave his life for suffering humanity. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, July 15, 1918, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, July 22, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Steamboat-Inspection Service for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1236); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmittting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for additional services and equipment for the office of the Auditor for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1237); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts: Petition of Newton Boatown, Courtenay Guild, John F. Brant, Henry H. Cummings, Duncan A. McPhil, Tremont Temple, and Rector D. Stetson, of Boston; Ralph P. Jones, of West Somerville; and George H. Carter, James M. York, and F. E. Cheney, of Cambridge, all in the State of Massachusetts, for complete and immediate prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KRAUS: Petition of sundry citizens of Marion, Ind., in behalf of the chiropractors of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SNELL: Petition of A. H. Minkler, F. W. Elger, Mary A. Elger, A. Elger, Effie M. Dignean, John G. Barnes, Eila B. Barnes, Wesley E. Baker, Royal Dignean, Jessie L. Kingsley, Charles G. Chase, Mildred T. Chase, R. B. Shoen, Frank Larme, Cephas A. Gilman, Jessie C. Shoen, M. H. Taylor, Elizabeth J. Taylor, Harriet A. H. Baker, and Harriet N. Hamilton, all of Racket River, N. Y., favoring war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 22, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in the exercise of our highest and most sacred privilege—the privilege of prayer—to lay before Thee our Nation's cause and our Nation's interest. To it we have consecrated our fortunes, our lives, and our sacred honor. All that is dearest to us has been put into the cause of our Nation. We look to Thee for Thy guidance and blessing. We pray that Thou wilt let Thy care be vouchsafed to those who represent us on the bloody battle field on this day; that the General of the Army may be given wisdom so to guide and direct the men under his command that they may move forward, as they have been moving forward, to yet greater victory and to greater glory to their arms. We pray Thee to hasten the day when our troops will come home with victory upon their banners, with the accomplishment of a world peace, and the entering in of the world's highest civilization. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
July 22, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 18, 1918, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 4555) to validate certain public-land entries, and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

PETITIONS.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Clay County, Kans., and a petition of sundry citizens of Gore County, Kans., praying for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a petition from citizens of the fourth district of Florida, the heading of which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hotel Seminole meeting, held July 4, 1918, fourth district of Florida:
We, the undersigned, urge you to vote and work for the immediate passage of the national suffrage amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a petition, signed by 37 citizens of King County, Wash., praying for the passage of a bill to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers. The petitioners respectfully urge the passage of this bill, giving as a reason that it will not excuse any man in the church from military service but will open up the way for more to enlist. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have a communication in the nature of a petition from the United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 2335, of Hanna, Wyo., setting forth that resolutions were adopted by that body with relation to, in fact recommending, some reclassification of registrants for the draft, so that those above the present prescribed draft age who have no vocation and those who may allege that they are in a vocation such as that of salesman or traveling representative, who make profit between producer and consumer, may be reached in this draft; in other words, the petition is in support of the rule that men of proper age and ability shall either work or fight. I present the resolutions, and I wish to add that I agree fully with the prayer of the petitioners. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4846) granting an increase of pension to John F. Mannel (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4847) granting a pension to Louisa Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CHARLES DADE.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying the bill S. 1659, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, granting relief to Charles Dade, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRINTING OF THE DAILY CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that if there is no objection I am going to ask that the Secretary request the Public Printer not to print the daily Calendar of Business until the 24th day of August. We can thus save 18 or 20 pages of paper and the printing involved. The calendar is of no use whatever to the Senate from to-day until the 24th of August, and we will be able to save just that much paper and just that much printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STRIKE IN WAR INDUSTRIES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a clipping from yesterday's New York Times, and I ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. SMOOT. What was the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. I asked for the reading of a short clipping, but if the Senator from Utah prefers that I should read it, I will do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I should prefer that the Senator read it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I read the following extract from yesterday's New York Times, which is entitled "31,000 strikers out in New England."

FEDERAL CONCILIATORS ACTIVE IN ATTEMPT TO END DISPUTE WHICH IS HAMPERING WAR WORK.

BOSTON, July 20.

The close of the first week of the Franco-American counteroffensive finds 31,000 workers—more than an American division—idle because of labor disputes at 10 industrial centers in Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Virtually all had been engaged on munitions of war and the disputes were over wages, shop conditions, or recognition of the unions.

There were few encouraging developments to-day, but it was hoped that meetings of the strikers and conferences between employers and employees might be fruitful of an early resumption of work. The most serious situations were at Lynn, where a strike of 10,000 workers had tied up the plant of the General Electric Co., and at Brockton, where an equal number of shoe operatives were out.

Federal Investigators James A. Sullivan and R. H. Leslie went to Brockton to-day. At Haverhill Mayor Morse made a futile attempt at reconciliation. At Pawtucket, R. I., John Golden, president of the United Textile Workers of America, announced that a representative of Secretary of War Baker had arrived.

Nothing new of importance was reported from Bristol and Woonsocket, where rubber makers are on strike, or from Warren, R. I., where 750 textile workers are out.

The Smith & Wesson revolver factory at Springfield continued in operation, but with its force depleted by about 900 men, according to strike leaders. The lesser troubles of the paper makers at Holyoke and weavers at Easthampton appeared no nearer adjustment.

The same edition of the paper gave an account of an address to some 5,000 strikers in New Jersey by Mrs. Creel on Saturday, who called attention, in a very commendable way, to the existing crisis and to the need for constant effort in production.

Mr. President, at a time when the fortunes of war seem to be changing, when the allied troops are marching from triumph to triumph, fighting by day and by night, fighting under the most oppressive conditions and winning victory for the great cause which they represent, it is doubly unfortunate that in their country, where munitions are the crying need of the hour, when everything needed for the facilitation of the success of our arms should be produced, over 40,000 men and women are voluntarily idle because they want to secure higher wages and what they think are better working conditions.

It is doubly unfortunate, Mr. President, when we reflect that within the last 60 days, pursuant to conferences between representatives of labor and those of the Government and by the unanimous consent of all concerned, a commission was appointed, with an ex-President of the United States at its head, equipped with power and with authority to inquire into and adjust all differences between employer and employee—a commission the appointment of which was hailed with much satisfaction by everyone as offering in all probability a happy solution of future differences, both actual and potential, whose good offices these strikers wholly repudiate.

It seems that our efforts to forestall a situation like this are made nugatory by the action of many who belong to, if they do not represent, one side of the conference which led to this gratifying result.

Mr. President, I want to enter my protest at this time, when the boys of America are engaged in the greatest struggle known to history, when everyone recognizes what this war means and how essential success is to the world's future, that so large a proportion of our population should be so indifferent to their duty and to the requirements of the hour as to suspend work under any circumstances—work quite as essential to our success as that so gloriously performed across the ocean.

What we need at the front, Mr. President, besides men are munitions, and we are not yet producing our quota of munitions. What these men across the sea need is clothing of all sorts, and while they have abundance for the present they may not have abundance when the snows begin to fly in October and November. If, forsooth, Mr. President, this victorious thrust to the eastward of the splendid soldiers of France and of America be halted for want of munitions, that very fact may result in a counter disaster that would restore the Germans to all that they have lost.

I affirm, Mr. President, that the conduct of these people at this time, although they may not so intend it, gives aid and comfort to the enemy at the very time when aid and comfort are greatly and sorely needed and who will doubtless welcome it. If striking were necessary, I would be the last to condemn this effort on the part of wage earners to secure what they think and what the country might determine to be an essential improvement in their condition; but when we consider that wages to-day are higher than wage earners ever dreamed of enjoying and that the Government has gone to extremes in providing against contingencies like this, to the end that differences may be adjusted while not interfering with production, it becomes the duty of every public man to denounce, to condemn, and to deplore resort to strikes as a means of forcing the hand of the employer. It is profiteering in the worst sense, because, in addition to the demand for more money of the Government, the object is sought to be obtained through suspension of production at a time when production is so sorely needed. I have joined, Mr. President, with others on this floor in condemning the profiteer, as I shall continue to do, but I will not draw any distinction between the wage-earning profiteer who enforces his demands at a time and in a crisis like this by refusing to work and the typical profiteer who takes advantage of the Government's necessities through contracts and manipulations whereby his wealth is increased at the cost of the country's needs. They are tarred with the same stick; they belong to the same class; they deserve the same criticism; they differ, Mr. President, only in degree.

This morning's papers announced the presence of a submarine in dangerous proximity to the New England coast. On yesterday it sank three helpless barges, destroying them in sight of spectators on our shores. During the last two months the whole coast has been menaced by the presence of submarines, a danger we have not yet overcome. I am afraid it is growing hourly. We can only overcome it, Mr. President, by the increase of our naval force and of those appliances which thus far have been found most potential in U-boat warfare; that is to say, by hurrying work on our torpedo destroyers, on munitions, and especially depth bombs; in the increase of our fighting planes; of everything Mr. President, that may minimize or destroy this menace. Yet, at the very time when in sight of our shores American shipping is being destroyed by the submarines of the enemy, nearly 40,000, perhaps over 40,000, men and women are idle, quarreling over the question of wages and refusing to work until their demands are complied with.

This presents an emergency which we should meet. Congress should reconvene and legislate regarding this subject. A maximum wage should be fixed and enforced by the Government, and those who encourage strikes should be treated as we treat others who give aid and encouragement to the enemy. If an individual is overheard uttering remarks derogatory to the war loan or saying anything which may be justly and fairly interpreted to discourage enlistment or to interfere with the enforcement of the draft or offering an obstacle, absolute or potential, to the due prosecution of the war, we proceed against him; we incarcerate him; we try him; and, if found guilty, we convict and punish him. Mr. President, the injury caused by this idleness to-day in New England and in New Jersey is more actual and more terrible, in my judgment, than all which has been accomplished by the fugitive utterances of individuals and by the treasonable publications of newspapers supposed to be disloyal to the Government.

I trust, therefore, that this menace, which is constantly increasing, will find early response in some sort of legislation, if need be, to grapple with and destroy it, by strengthening the hands of the Government, to the end that labor difficulties may be settled as the industrial agreement requires that they should be settled, to the end that our highest efforts everywhere may be given to the production of munitions and of all other supplies needed in warfare. Treason should be made odious everywhere. We must recognize it whether it appears in strikes or in publications, in conspiracies or in openly declared hostility to the Government. We can not be indifferent to this subject for it is too insistent and too common for the public safety.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senate to indulge me for five or six minutes, but I do not wish to do that at the expense of any Senator who desires to present morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for five or six minutes upon a noncontroversial subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course I would not think of objecting to the request of the distinguished and eloquent Senator from Illinois; it is a pleasure to listen to him; but I wish the Senate to understand that, as I construe the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate can not give consent to anything; anything that requires consent on the part of the Senate is estopped from being done. I will not, however, make any objection, because I wish to hear the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I hardly think an objection would apply to the subject to which I desire to address myself.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to hear the Senator on any subject; but I believe we will fall, as the days go by, into some very grievous errors and make some serious mistakes if we continue to ask unanimous consent for this and for that. I am not going to object any more. I think a Senator has a right to address the Senate for no longer than five minutes upon any subject he pleases under the rules, and he is within the rule and within the spirit alike of the unanimous-consent agreement when he addresses the Senate during the morning hour upon any subject for not longer than five minutes.

I objected the other day to my good friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] proceeding. I selected him because of the cordial friendship between us. Since my public statement here as to my views regarding the unanimous-consent agreement I have received a telegram from a Member of the Senate, not a Democratic Senator but from a Republican Senator, urging that the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement should be observed and that under its spirit nothing that requires consent on the part of the Senate can be done. I do not object, of course, to the Senator from Illinois proceeding. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] referred to the fact that a Senator could speak five minutes under the order of morning business. I do not know of any rule that even permits that.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe I am in error about that. I was thinking of the time between the expiration of the routine morning business and the remainder of the morning hour until 2 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have assumed, Mr. President, that during the morning hour a Senator can speak on any matter he desires unless objection is made——

Mr. LEWIS. I think that is the rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that no request for unanimous consent is necessary; that if no Senator objects the Senator having the floor can proceed with his remarks during the morning hour.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I only made the request because either the present distinguished occupant of the chair or the President pro tempore has intimated that unanimous consent was necessary. I did not so understand, but I conformed to the suggestion, knowing that no Senator would stand upon that form. If, however, it is not necessary and it is assumed that I may proceed for a few minutes merely within my rights, unless objection is made, I would rather do that than to establish the necessity of the Chair having to rule in each instance as to each Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that unanimous agreements of this kind have been entered into heretofore by the Senate. I suggest to Senators that morning business be first attended to, and then any Senator, under the unanimous-consent agreement, can proceed to speak unless or until there is objection raised, and then, when objection is raised, that must stop debate.

I should like to suggest that Senators allow the regular morning business to proceed, and then secure recognition before the Chair announces the conclusion of the morning business. Then, if Senators desire to leave the Chamber, they can leave knowing that the Senator occupying the floor can not continue beyond 2 o'clock. I think that would be the orderly way to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate must adjourn at the conclusion of the regular routine morning business. So far as consent is concerned, when the morning business is disposed of, it seems to the Chair that it is within the control of the Senate whether Senators shall be permitted to address the Senate. The Chair will say, however, that in no event can the proceedings extend beyond 2 o'clock.

Mr. LEWIS. In this connection I desire to concur with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and if any Senator here has a petition to present, or what is called morning business, I would prefer to yield to him at this time than to interfere with the regular procedure. I shall, therefore, wait until petitions and memorials have been presented for such little matters as I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate. I pause for a moment to say I yield to any Senator who wishes to present a petition or a memorial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I understand that order brings the morning business to a conclusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not declared morning business concluded. When he does there may not be an opportunity to speak.

THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, my purpose in rising is to address the Senate upon the report the public press brings through the cables to our countrymen as to the conduct of our soldiers abroad. In view of the patriotic discussion this morning of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I take it that what views I shall express will not be unwelcome to this body.

We read in the cables that under the order of a superior commander in France the colors of America were directed to the rear, and the report has it that the American soldiers returned the reply stating that, while they respected the orders of their military masters, they could but view with humiliation the necessity which carried the colors of America to the rear, and that it was their purpose to make a "counter attack."

Mr. President, I am moved to recall to the mind of the Senate that in the ancient days the Greek meeting Greek called out, "What news?" The answer was, "Greece is still the Greeks'." If there shall be those who ask to-day the news of France, we reply, "France is still French."

The River Marne, long the Rubicon barring imperial despotism from European democracy, is still the stream at whose banks the fire chariots and bloody hosts of murderous captains are ever swallowed. The news is, "the Germans have retreated across the Marne." Sir, it was the American who drove him to his retreat—the American soldier, whose intelligent valor at first trial against German brute obedience shattered the German forces, captured their arms and cannon, and took as prisoners their commanders and armies. It was the American who rescued five cities from German siege and gave deliverance anew to imperiled France. These Americans, fresh from life's devotions to religious peace, met the German trained warriors of a life of martial discipline, perfected under four years of systematized process of raid and slaughter, and these Americans, with the spring of action, with the bold courage that is their inheritance, and with the unquenchable will to conquer, gave Germany the surprise shock of its existence as they showed how American soldiers of but one year's military training could excel in the arts of war and surpass in the dash and carry of attack over the Kaiser's blood-immured soldiers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think that the French are entitled to just a little bit of credit for that magnificent achievement?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator will see in a few moments that he will have no occasion to think I have lost sight of that fact. I might reply more in detail, Senators, and say that up to this point I am alluding to the fact of the American charge and to the American threat that they would make a counter attack. It is as to that counter attack that these Americans made to which I particularly pay tribute at this time.

These Americans, fighting on a soil that was strange, advancing on fields unexplored, and moving to commands in a tongue confusing, opposed those who had seven times charted with their swords their course over these stretches and often echoed with cannon roar their marches over and across this blood-smutched morass.

Sir, we here pause feelingly to pay dues to the cooperation of the French, to the splendor of their design and the glory of their execution. These French, indomitable as is France, repeated all that which before was its sublime example; and yet, sir, we will not refrain from marking the fact that the glorious deed of holy achievement was by the Americans. It was the Americans who, seeing their flag marched to the rear under discipline of military maneuver, were bowed in humiliation and sent the challenge to their military masters proclaiming that America could not see her ennobled colors, long sanctified in patriot fathers' blood, driven to the rear and trailed in submission. America's soldiers shouted out their determination to "counter attack." Then all the world witnessed that the words were but spoken when, with cheers from the American heart and the daring of the American soul, the counter attack was hurled by Americans against Germany. Then American bayonets twisted and locked over German helmets, while their cracking rifles snapped by a thousand echoes in German faces. American cannon bulged and belched against German angles and crushed and scattered German lines and squares. There, hand to hand, life to life, was the "counter attack." It was America on trial; her sons in the test. The hour burned with the flames of the fiery onset. Then came the rush, the crush, and the victory!

It was now no more the American flag carried to the rear, but by American counter attack it was the German imperial black ensign that fell and floundered at the rear, while America's flag was planted on German ramparts, where it flies over German outposts and floats, in the evening sun, a pennant of advance and victory. The enemy it is who has surrendered. Five towns recovered, two river reaches won, miles of distance possessed as the enemy's army retreated before America's advance. America's flag in counter attack—now the colors of the Republic, full high in honor and glorious in triumph!

Sir, if the French drummer boy had never been taught to beat a retreat, so, too, the American soldier had never learned how his flag could stay to the rear. Senators, the American flag was born at the fore of civilization and shall live in the front of its defense. Let Germany know that, now that she has forced us into the conflict for the defense of all that we are, this America knows no retreat. Her course is ahead; her orders "advance"; and to every repulse her response is, "We will counter attack." And this America will do; will repeat and redouble the attack until every stronghold of German aggression upon the rights of man has been beaten back, civilization rescued from its peril, and enlightened liberty restored to the government of man.

Mr. President, to-day as we send sympathy to our patriotic citizen, once President, Theodore Roosevelt, for the loss that is his, as we breathe our sorrow to every home whose son has fallen in our cause, as we drop a tear for that mother whose noble boy fights and falls, and stretch our hand to the father whose heart bleeds but who exults in the glory of his boy, we praise all, but, above all, bless God that we are Americans. I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed, and, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock on Thursday next.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 25, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 22, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry M. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Humbly and reverently we bow in Thy sacred presence, Eternal God our Heavenly Father, and seek most earnestly Thy counsels to uphold, sustain, and guide us in the stupendous duty we have assumed as a Nation in the world-wide contest for righteousness, truth, liberty, and justice.

Enhance our faith, quicken our hopes, and strengthen us for the gigantic task, which calls for the greatest and holiest sacrifices of our people and soldiers, for the peoples and soldiers of our allies.

We thank Thee for the wealth at our hands; for the willingness of our people to sacrifice means and men in the righteous cause.

Make us strong to resist; firm in our convictions to advance the holy cause, in all that is purest and best.

In His Name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 18, 1918, was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 4555. An act to validate certain public-land entries.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

On July 15, 1918:

H. R. 12099. An act to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10852. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads; and

H. J. Res. 309. Joint resolution to authorize the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor.

On July 18, 1918:

H. R. 8839. An act for the establishment of Oswego, in the State of New York, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; and

H. R. 12002. An act for the establishment of Bar Harbor, in the State of Maine, as a port of entry and delivery for the immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, under the consent agreement heretofore made I move that the House do now adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, July 25, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petitions of G. E. Spahn, president Capital City Commercial School, Madison, and of E. W. Spencer, president Spencerian Business College, Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the proposal to tax the tuition fees of private schools; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DENISON: Petition of Owen F. Thompson and numerous other citizens of the twenty-fifth congressional district of Illinois, members of the Reformed Presbyterian (Covenanter) Church of North America, indorsing H. R. 10266, a bill to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, in order to relieve those who object on conscientious grounds to the oath prescribed by law for officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 25, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire to hold our place with honor and with high regard for the eternal principles of justice among the nations of the earth. We desire to administer truth and to lead in the path of a right conscience toward God and man. We pray that we may be given wisdom in proportion to our power and influence among the nations of the earth, and may the message and ministry of our people be that of the highest ideal of a Christian civilization. Hear us in our prayer and fit us for the responsibilities of this day. Let Thy blessing come upon the boys who are representing us upon the bloody battle field this day. Bring success to them. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
July 25, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of Monday, July 22, 1918, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MAILS OF AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE (S. DOC. NO. 269, PT. 2).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in further response to a resolution of the 5th instant, a more complete statement relative to the operations of the War Department in connection with the handling of mails to and from the American Expeditionary Force, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3529) to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance."

MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Murray County, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed increase of 10 cents per gallon on gasoline, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the discrimination of freight rates on grain, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10818) to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 553) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. NORRIS introduced a bill (S. 4848) granting an increase of pension to Robert R. Polk, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 287), which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate full information showing the names of all commissioned officers in the military service of the United States, who, since the 6th day of April, 1917, have received or are receiving any salary, compensation, gratuities, gifts, or emoluments of any kind, character, or description from any person, corporation, or voluntary association which has been, or is now, engaged in any business pursuit, enterprise, or undertaking; and also showing whether any of said persons, corporations, or voluntary associations has directly or indirectly had any dealings with the United States since said date, and the character, nature, and extent of the same.

NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the question of nation-wide prohibition as a war measure.

Congress, having prohibited the selling of intoxicating drinks to soldiers and provided for moral zones about cantonments and stopped the making of foodstuff into whisky, should consistently and courageously go forward to complete prohibition for the period of the war—

(1) To protect the soldiers when on furlough by making "moral zones" nation wide. "If we expect the soldiers to die for us, we ought to be willing to go 'dry' for them." Saloons and their auxiliaries in Newport and Philadelphia and other "wet" cities have persistently debauched our fighting forces despite warnings, as is proved by restrictions put upon them by the Army and the Navy, which, however, can only palliate this peril to soldierly efficiency until prohibition comes in some way to their aid; and let us not forget it is the saloons that have made many of draft age incapable of military duty—left at home to breed the next generation.

(2) To protect the efficiency of industrial workers, since it is not the Army and Navy only but the whole Nation whose efforts must be enlisted to win the war. President Wilson, on June 11, in a telegram to industrial workers, said: "The war can be lost in America as well as on the fields of France." He was referring to interruption of war work by strikes, but far more time is lost by drink; not alone by drunkenness that keeps many from their work but also by moderate drinking that slows up the work. Instead of beer adding 25 per cent to the work done in industrial plants, which recently has been asserted without a word of proof, there is abundant evidence all the way from Pennsylvania to Russia that beer and other intoxicants cut down work in munition plants, mines, and shipyards, in quantity and quality, from 10 to 30 per cent.

(3) To save the 7,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs wasted annually in beer and wine, which is more than twice as much as whisky destroys.

(4) To save the sixty-six and a half millions of tons of coal, the $6,000,000,000 in money, the 200,000 freight cars, the billions of dollars' worth of man power, which whisky, wine, and beer divert yearly from war uses, for which they are urgently needed.

(5) To emancipate American politics from the attempted domination of the brewers, whose right arm, the German-American Alliance, has been cut off, suggesting that the head "higher up" that guided this treacherous arm should share the same fate, for disloyalty was involved, even if conservation of manhood and other resources were not. This surely is a substantial reason for closing the saloons, many of them owned by brewers, viz: That the hearings in Congress on the German-American Alliance have shown the brewers to be the Kaiser's friends, serving his cause by opposing our entrance into the war, as well as by weakening, through the sale of liquor, our industrial ranks, and to some extent our soldiers in spite of the law. The revelation of this disloyalty has made war prohibition less difficult.

I will make reply to some of the objections to immediate nation-wide prohibition as a war measure.

It is said: "Let the President do it." Through the Food Administration he put prohibition up to Congress on June 13, 1918, when Mr. Hoover said: "If the American people or Congress will stop the sale of distilled liquors, we will find no trouble in stopping brewing." This also answers objections to going beyond food conservation. It is a challenge to those objecting to the prohibition of beer while whisky remains on sale, though beer consumes twice as much of foodstuffs. That is a recognition that the evil effects of drink on man power are far more important than its waste of food. That, too, should remind us that the real hindrance to war activities is not the making but the selling of drink—the saloon that remains with all its injurious effects until we stop the sale of all intoxicating drinks, including wine, which, though it destroys less necessary food than beer, is stronger in alcohol and more injurious to soldiers and industrial workers. That we may fight with our full strength, the liquor traffic must go.

As to bankers carrying whisky securities: Since the ebb tide of liquor began in 1907, 25 States have been added to the 3 previously "dry," and it has been since then speculating in futures, therefore, to hold any considerable whisky securities. Two cities lost national reserve banks to smaller cities, I have heard, because Treasury officials found an undue amount of whisky securities. They should have taken warning. The indorsers on whisky securities are, no doubt, mostly the men who have made fortunes on the recent rise in whisky prices, and are doubtless able to redeem their notes. Banks having whisky stock can doubtless unload without shock, though perhaps not without some speculative loss, in three months.

As to the attitude of labor: The labor unions in dry States indorse prohibition, as shown by their declarations read in debates on constitutional prohibition in December, 1917, by Representative WEBB and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. Out of 22,000 labor unions only 447 sent in petitions against prohibition, one-fiftieth of all, and all of them were from "wet" States that knew nothing at first-hand of the subject. Mr. Charles Stelzle has shown that those petitions to Congress did not represent the more than two millions it was declared they represented, that figure having been reached by counting members of many unions twice or three times in local, State, and national unions. Mr. Gompers, as he said in a letter to Congress, December 6, 1917, speaks only for himself and the "wet" unions in the federation that asked him to speak for them.

In reply to Messrs. Hurley and Colby and others who claim that prohibition would lessen speed and efficiency in shipbuilding: Secretary Daniels says that shipbuilding plants in "dry" States have made a better record than those of the "wet" States. J. A. Duncan, labor leader of Seattle, says: "Seattle has the best shipbuilding record in the world because of organization and prohibition. Booze never helps but always retards legitimate industry." John R. Russell, president of the Great Lakes Engineering Works, says: "Prohibition has had such signal success in benefiting ship construction in Michigan that similar legislation is absolutely required, in our opinion, to enable the United States Shipping Board to carry out its war program." Dr. J. Havergal Sheppard, of the national service section of the Shipping Board, says: "I am convinced from actual contact with men in shipyards, from Newport to Los Angeles, by way of the Great Lakes, that efficiency will be increased 20 per cent by prohibition."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely want to suggest to the Senator from Montana, in connection with his comment regarding the statement of Mr. Colby and Mr. Hurley, that the American Emergency Fleet News, a paper issued by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, also very emphatically repudiates their suggestion that prohibition would diminish the efficiency of labor by 25 per cent, and shows that, on the contrary, the shipping yards in prohibition States have maintained the record for efficiency while the Emergency Fleet Corporation has been in operation.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator from Washington. I am glad to have that addition to the information on the subject. It is very valuable.

Workers repudiate the intimation that they will "make trouble" if saloons are closed. It is the opening of saloons that "makes trouble." There were no riots of workmen when saloons were banished from Atlanta, Washington, Denver, Seattle, and Detroit.

The "harmony" we want is not that of suppressed discussion, dissipation, and decrease of physical power, but that which will come by fighting this war with our full strength to an early and enduring peace.

The production of coal is one of the vital economic necessities in the prosecution of the war. Without an adequate supply of coal we can neither win the war nor keep our industrial life going. We know what a tremendous struggle it was last winter to obtain an adequate supply of coal for the country. We know a shortage is seriously threatened for next winter. We know how imperative it is for us to have coal. We know what suffering will ensue if sufficient coal should not be obtained. The committee on coal production of the National Coal Association recently issued and sent broadcast over the country a letter. I received one, and I read it:

NATIONAL COAL ASSOCIATION.
Washington, D. C., July 10, 1918.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The committee on coal production of the National Coal Association, appointed to devise recommendations to the United States Fuel Administration on ways and means to increase the coal production of the United States, met in Washington on June 27, 1918. Among the fundamental measures deemed necessary to increase production sufficiently to meet the fuel emergency of the coming winter, the committee unanimously adopted and submitted to the United States Fuel Administration the following recommendation on national prohibition:

"Regardless of political affiliations of the members of the association, and leaving out of consideration the moral issues involved, and basing its opinion entirely on economic and patriotic grounds, the committee unanimously and unqualifiedly believes that national prohibition for the period of the war is absolutely necessary to make effective this or any other plan for increased coal production. A comparison of the records of production of mines in wet and dry territories furnishes ample proof of the need of prohibition. The various instances cited to you to-day need not be repeated here, but they typify the experience of operators throughout the entire country."

This recommendation has the hearty approval of J. B. Neale, director of coal production of the United States Fuel Administration. Strong testimony in support of it is available from representative coal operators throughout the country.

Very truly, yours, A. R. HAMILTON,
Chairman Committee on Coal Production,
National Coal Association.

GERMAN PEACE PROPOSALS—THE DELUSION OF THEM—WARNING TO AMERICA.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, my purpose in rising is somewhat different from that disclosed by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. President, I have for three or four mornings and this morning the experience of receiving protests in rather flaming language and in accusatory form, all charging this Government with having for its object the obeying of the demand of the capitalist power—whatever that means—in going into Russia, in refusing to "recognize the Bolsheviki," and in "intruding ourselves in their affairs just at a time," as the petitions charge, "when the rights of those who claim to represent the will of the people are about to be enforced." These petitions charge that this Government has the object or desire of intercepting the men who represent what they call "real democracy"; that we are upon the eve of some intervention that they claim is in violation of all the policies which heretofore we have professed. They call attention to our friendship in the past shown to the democracy of Greece and the passage by Congress of resolutions in behalf of the different lands of South America when these were protesting against kingly oppression and fighting for their liberties. They invite attention to the fact that we raised a voice against foreign governments attempting to lay a strong hand upon the revolutionists of Cuba when Cuba sought freedom.

I deplore that one of these petitions referred to the "capitalist-owned" Republican Party, to the "capitalist-owned" Democratic Party, to the Senate as the slave of this wealth that merely bided its time to surrender, to the House of Representatives as the tool of tyranny, and everywhere asserts that this present administration watches for an opportunity to ally itself with "those interests that are destroying democracy and are marching on over liberty."

Mr. President, I never have refused to present petitions to this body whenever they came respectfully, and even when I was very much opposed to the subject matter of the petition; but I do not feel that I am under any obligation to any people who may call themselves my constituents to present resolutions to this body which are so couched in such unbecoming accusations—so unwarranted, in fact—as these in their reflections upon Senators who are loyal and faithful in their public service to their country, however much they may differ from each other on local subjects. I decline to present these petitions, and I do not want the cover of cowardice or the excuse that I did not receive them or that I forgot them or that I have been prohibited from presenting them by any particular rule of the Senate. I wish to say that I decline to present them. I decline to present them, not because I would not present to the Senate any protest from any American upon any subject touching government, but I do not feel that, in such language as they are framed, in such accusations as they are modeled, they should be presented here or that I could sponsor their presentation.

Mr. President, I may be indulged I trust by the Senate but for a suggestion on an important international phase suggested by these resolutions. I think we are being confronted at this time with a most attractive and consoling aspect, so far as the European war is concerned, particularly as to the East. If history is a guide to us, all preceding action anticipating surrender, concessions, compromises equivalent to the confession of defeat are now being duplicated by the course of the Imperial German Government.

A short while past the officials of that Government asserted to the world that it was their object to hold all of those lands which had become their conquest, and all of those people that had become subjugated by the power of the sword. This was before America landed her soldiers and gave evidence of what we may call proof earnest of what we could do, what we would do, and what we had entered this war to do.

Mr. President, it is interesting to note that we have from Von Kuehlmann, now foreign minister, the statement that Germany is now ready for peace, and the further statement that this peace can not be obtained by arms nor is it expected that it shall be by arms. The appeal is now made that there be some diplomatic arrangement entered into by which there be some diplomatic tribunal established before which the propositions of peace may be made. One would have imagined, sir, when this proposition was made by Von Kuehlmann, that it would have met the indignant repudiation on the part of the Kaiser, it was so at variance with all the past boastings that had occupied those eminent leaders in their defiance to any movement in behalf of justice and liberty, particularly as against us who were the envoy, as we felt, of just government administered by the will of the people.

Promptly after this Von Kuehlmann message we are moved to consider that Von Hertling, the chancellor, comes forth now to proclaim that it was never the intention of Germany to hold Belgium as a vassal nor to continue it as a prize; that the only object in holding Belgium is that it may be treated, to use his words, as a "pawn," something as a basis of trade. Where? Mr. President, evidently in that anticipated diplomatic convention that is about to be called or that is desired, referred to by Von Kuehlmann, and as one of the considerations for the peace terms to be asked by Germany.

Now, sir, that is followed with the statement of an intimation to surrender Serbia, Roumania, a part of the Bulgarian country, and to yield all of those concrete demands as to military-conquered countries of Europe—propositions for which we have contended as necessary to democracy and to liberty.

Mr. President, what does this mean? If there be those in this country who are now charging the United States with the object of intervening in the East in any form of intervention for the purpose of suppressing liberty, let them understand that any move this Government may make in harmony with the other Governments working to the common end of obtaining justice for the world is not addressed to suppressing anything in the East or intervening with a view of disturbing a free Government, whether it be Russia or any other Government that is at peace or on its way to liberty, but that our action, whatever it is to be, is to prevent the success of the design of Prussia, which is demonstrated to my mind, exhibited very clearly, sir, by those two professions on the part of Von Kuehlmann and Hertling.

What are they, sir? For a minute indulge me; and, Senators, I trust I am not imposing upon your patience. Some time past I took the liberty of making a statement on this floor, and, I think, it was the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] who forecasted my views in an expression of his own. Mr. President, we then said that in the lapse of time Prussia took from her military drives; and while she indulged the suggestion of what she called her peace move or peace drive, the real object was to tender to us an apparent evidence of granting all that we had asked in the way of freedom of the seas and government by the consent of the governed. Then she would make the offer to do something with Belgium satisfactory to the world and yield up the smaller possessions—particularly northern France and Alsace-Loraine.

I made bold then, Mr. President, to offer the suggestion that all this when it came forth would be in consideration of our yielding to Germany the undisturbed privilege to possess all of that eastern country which she had overrun and taken by sword and cannon—that part of Poland, Lithuania, Esthonia, and a portion of Russia leading to an eastern outlet from sea to sea of which she is now in full control. This extends from Finland over across the Baltic and down to the Caspian. I said then that it was my opinion that her purpose was to make tender to the world that she was yielding everything we sought for in return for those things in the East, which, at the time we entered the war, she would say were not in our consideration and could not have been within our purpose, for when we entered the war she would say that those particular territories of Russia had no interest to us, and that, therefore, whatever has transpired concerning them was in defense of Germany against the advance she charges Russia had made upon her and not in opposition to any assault she had made against the Russians.

Mr. President, I am free to tell you there is information in this community that the suggestion has now been made by Prussia and Austria, filtered through Italy, and will find its way in a more official form and outwardly to all the people, that Germany's proposition for peace is now that she will before the world tender Belgium, Roumania, something of privileges to Serbia, an apparent concession to the world of freedom of the seas for which America went to war, and the consent of the governed to the different localities now subjugated, and for herself will ask in turn that as to all of this country of the East of which she has become possessed she be allowed to deal with it herself without our interference, the interference of Britain, or that of France, or of any other of the allies, her object being that she may obtain the East and hold it—the thing that has been long her object—an increased population of 250,000,000 of people and a property of hundreds of billions of dollars. I have held, Senators, within myself that the principal object of Prussia in this war was to capture the East, that she might hold the East, there to work her power in multiplied form for future destruction of her opponents. I think I see now, sir—and I say it with a proper deference, recognizing that I can not be a prophet and have no more information than probably the ordinary Senator about me has—that the proposition now that will be before us in the immediate day has for its design to awaken the American public to the idea that we are now fighting uselessly. To give the impression that the men who are dying, crossing the Marne, moving forward in their valor and glory, are having their lives spent without a purpose; to impress mankind that Germany is tendering to the United States everything for which she went to war and yielding to the allies every land for which they went to war; and to charge that the continuance of this conflict and the pushing of the allied armies forward into German territory is in direct violation of the things for which we said we went to war. The purpose is to awaken revolt on the part of every mother of a boy and every father of a son. To spread the cry in this country, echoing, "Gentlemen, why not accept the terms of Germany; she gives everything for which you went to war; she tenders a yielding to every proposition that you have ever asked; she only asks to be let alone as to those matters which were not the concern of America when she went to war and which Germany has obtained by virtue of her power in her defense after she was wrongfully assailed by Russia." Senators, Germany will present to the United States that it was Russia that prepared to assail her and that when she mobilized she did so only with the single object of meeting this advance. She is now saying this through Von Hertling, although we recall that Litchnowski, the German ambassador for Britain, at London, but a short while ago gave out that when the war came on through the action of Serbia it was the result long calculated and ordered, notwithstanding the efforts of Britain and Russia to arbitrate; that the suddenness of action was in order that Prussia might take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded for quick assault. This ex-ambassador has not been called to account for this confession.

Mr. President, I think I see clearly the move to advance upon our people with this false doctrine with a view to awakening, if they can, dissent in our Nation, to create in Britain, sir, the feeling that all that Britain has gone to war for is now conceded, in the alleged granting of the rights of France and the rights of the sea. The object is to give to France the idea that all that for which France fought—Alsace-Lorraine and her northern border and fixed borderland—is now being conceded, and yet with all of that we still fight. The charge will be made that at last we are in the open, confessing that we are fighting for the possession of territory, to rob Germany of the field which is hers, and that in no wise, sir, were these zones which we entered to protect and concern a people in whose interests and for whose welfare we have heretofore never professed any purpose or protection.

Mr. President, therefore, what will it mean? It will mean that if Germany by way of Esthonia, by way of Roumania, or by way of Vladivostok can get into the East she will have all of the soldiers, the vast millions, of this newly conquered eastern country—Russia and her accessories—and she will promptly organize them into an army of stupendous force. Remembering the grievance that she feels of our aid to the allies, as she calls it, and our entering this war just at the moment she felt her triumph, she will, by way of Vladivostok, assail us from the Pacific or, sir, coming around and out of the Persian Gulf into the Mediterranean, assail us from the Atlantic; and it will be our country, the United States, which will be the very first to pay the penalty of yielding to these artful suggestions which are being made now with a view to arousing our countrymen to protest against further war. Therefore, if the United States shall find it necessary, in conjunction with those who are cooperating with us, to enter into Russia or into Siberia, let it be understood that it is not for the purpose, as charged by these petitioners or by other people, of intercepting any free government in those lands, nor of taking one inch of anybody's territory or preventing the establishment of any democracy under law, but of preventing conversion by Prussia of these peoples—some innocent, some corrupt—into her service, by which she would possess everything from Poland up to Vladivostok in the East, then to convert all of that force against us to the destruction of the things for which we did go into the war and be herself enabled to return to the conflict with a multiplied force and reopen all of the bloody conflict which she has precipitated on this earth in the present war.

For that reason we enter, sir, for our protection as well as for the salvation of the liberty to the hoping people of Russia, not as intruders, not as trespassers, but we do warn Prussia that we see through her designs; we understand this new profession of peace, this false propaganda; we inform her that we are not lured by its false glare; by it we are not deceived. And, sir, we announce that the course we will take is the course we should take for the preservation of those who rely upon us, and above all, sir, for that sure defense of America, whose soil and whose future is in danger unless we shall guard those interests in the East that could be converted against us by way of the Pacific.

I would protest against such peace terms and stand against them wherever I could make my voice heard, and I express to the people who send these petitions, as I do to my eminent colleagues here, that our duty here in the face of war and the real designs on the part of Germany is to take the course that is in the mind and intention of our Government respecting the protection of Russia, the preservation of the East, and the proper salvation of America on the Pacific.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have assumed to offer these suggestions, and I might also say to my people that I trust that the object of these publications, which may come to us in apparent innocence, may not be misunderstood; that it shall be made known that it is with the view of inducing our people to believe that peace can be had upon their own terms, with the object of tendering as the consideration of that peace that we yield those peoples and those countries which to surrender would mean very shortly afterwards their oppression and our destruction. We answer all these approaches of Germany beseeching that we halt and listen to deception by replying in the words of the parable, Our hand is to the plow; we will not look back; our order is advance!

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to hear any peace talk or any intimation of peace while Germany occupies Belgium or flies her colors above a single foot of French soil. Neither do I wish to hear any intimations of peace, Mr. President, until Germany has disavowed her piratical warfare on the sea and given pledges to the civilized world that the submarine shall cease its mockery of humanity, not only now but under guaranties for Germany's future behavior. I do not wish, Mr. President, to take time at this inopportune moment and under the limitations under which we proceed during the recess. I only desire to add to what my colleague from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has forcefully intimated, that peace can not be considered so long as Germany has failed to disavow the reasons that impelled us to declare war against her. There can be no peace on our part while such a public enemy remains at war with this country and with our allies. The only time I myself care to consider whether peace shall be discussed in this Chamber is when the power of the United States and her allies has driven Germany from Belgium, from France, has taken her by force off the high seas, and when the colors of this Republic are triumphant over the helmet of the Prussian. When that is done, when military force on land and sea has demonstrated even to the apostles of brute force in this world that we can meet them on their own terms and conquer them, I am willing to talk about peace and to listen to some terms for the adjustment of this trouble. Never will there be peace without victory, but there must be peace with a conclusive and overwhelming victory over our public enemies. Until that shall be done, Mr. President, it is idle to talk or think peace; until that time has arrived, our duty in this Chamber is to talk of force without limit, without stint, and to the utmost—swift, unrelenting, and decisive war. To that end let our aeroplane development be thoroughly investigated by the authorities now in charge of it, and in addition to that let us vote not only additional appropriations and men for all proper purposes, but let us see that those appropriations are made effective and that the existing waste be stopped. Let our economical development proceed, but let the expenditure of millions upon millions without adequate result be checked. I understand that these things are incidental to hasty preparation, and I speak in no spirit of criticism but only in a spirit of making our action effective so that we may continue the means of waging unrelenting war until we have produced decisive victory, out of which shall come a permanent peace.

Mr. President, we have in our camps in this country some of the best of our generation; we have across the sea others of the best of our generation. The two years that will end with present appropriations made or to be made will show an expenditure of $50,000,000,000 that is to be raised by present and future taxation. When the best of our blood, when the countless billions that come from our resources, from our accumulations and our daily toil are to be spent in waging a war of this kind, there is but one way to talk peace, and that is through the agency of our Army and Navy and to continue pressing back the line that is now north of the Marne until the colors representing the enemy that began this war four years ago shall be thrust back beyond the Rhine, until not one acre of French territory remains under the guns of Germany. Let them then ask for peace. Shall I begin to talk peace to the burglar in my house at night? When I awaken from my slumbers and find a murderous ruffian rifling my household or destroying my family shall I, when I recover the power of speech, ask this cutpurse for peace, or rather shall I gird my armor about me, seize whatever weapons I have, and appeal to the God of battles and let the invader ask for peace after he shall have been subjugated? That is the time when and the source from which peace must come—not from us, who are the outraged victims on land or sea; not from us, who took up arms justly a year ago last April to meet this invader of the world's peace. So, I repeat, Mr. President, let this great cutpurse of empires understand that the free Governments of the world are to-day meeting with their blood and treasure his efforts to dominate the earth.

Mr. President, most of this is futile. I realize, as a certain Senator said to me in private conversation, that we are talking about nothing to nobody most of the time here. That was a very apt summing up of the situation. I only make that as introductory to the further statement—and I shall only take two or three minutes—that when victory shall have been achieved, when it is properly time to talk peace, we shall not have anything to say about it.

A commission is now gathering data. That commission is headed by an unofficial representative of governmental power. Editors of newspapers, statisticians of renown, statesmen who have never held office, legislators who never legislated, judges who have never judged and who could not if they tried, gentlemen of various talents, many of them habitual dwellers in air castles, idealists, the dreamers of the generation, are found on that commission. When they, some of them practical men and some of them impractical men, have secured a wealth of information about the world and it comes time to gather about a peace table and to arrive at a tentative peace, the treaty will be written without our knowledge or consent.

It will be perfected, and then this gem and brooch of all human wisdom will be put before us for instant ratification. We will not even have the poor consolation of the comprehensive and peculiar knowledge that percolated through the brains of the men who prepared it. We will be poor children of blind impulse, wandering in the wilderness without even a voice to guide us. The babes in the wood would be comparatively well provided for when covered with leaves alongside of the senatorial members who will be asked to vote "sight unseen" for the peace treaty that will suddenly be thrown unheralded before us. I shall animadvert in proper terms and under proper conditions upon this mysterious commission now gathering information on some future occasion when I am not subject to such limitations as I now am, but when we are talking about peace I wish it to be remembered that this mysterious agency of unofficial government is lightening our labors and relieving us of any mental agitation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is criticizing the present method of framing treaties. I should like to know if he has any practical suggestion to offer with reference to a change in the method of entering into treaties on behalf of this country, and, while he is considering that question, I should also like to inquire if he believes there can be any permanent peace in the world so long as the Kaiser has the right of declaring war at his own sweet will and of making peace upon such terms as to him alone shall seem justifiable?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. Answering the last question first, there can be no permanent peace in the world so long as Germany is dominated by the Kaiser or the militaristic party, which sometimes excuses his actions because they are involuntary, his generals, it is alleged, forcing him into a certain line of conduct. Taking that for what it is worth, the coterie of Prussians that surround him or the Kaiser himself can never make a peace with free governments that will be permanent. There must be a complete overthrow of both Kaiser and his council; an overthrow not by diplomacy but an overthrow by the decisive and swiftly driven power of armies and navies. With such a government as that of Germany there can be no permanent peace. It will be an armed truce that converts the world into a military camp. There must be a complete transmutation of the power of the German people, a complete change until their government is responsive to the better thought and the humanities that still are found in the hearts of some, at least, of the German people.

They are public enemies now; they have roused the most brutal impulses that are latent in the American people. This brutalizing of all concerned is the regrettable feature of this war, but until we have reached the point where Germany can form a government that is responsible to German opinion in its better sense, the nation for which Heine wrote, the nation that felt its responsive heart thrill when Goethe was the literary genius of his generation, when Schiller had sympathetic readers, and when their humane instincts appealed to the better element and nature of the German people—until there is a new spirit born in Germany, until the arbitrary house that has sought to make the Prussian people the dominant race of the world is overthrown, there can be no permanent peace, and there will be none. Until that time is reached America must fight with all the resources she can command.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield in a moment. The Senator from New Mexico asked if there were a better way of negotiating treaties. There are none, providing treaties are negotiated through official agents and responsible authorities. The tentative treaty must be made in that way. It will be approved by the Executive, and when it reaches the proper degree of preparation it will be placed before the Senate. With that procedure, Mr. President, I have no complaint; for it I have no criticism. What I criticize is the unofficial personal government which is beyond the channels known to the Constitution—extra-official, beyond all diplomatic authority, by men who hold the Congress in flagrant and notorious contempt, who speak of us as "leather-throated spellbinders," who say that we boil with rage because somebody who holds public office and is regarded as a statesman is not on this committee in connection with negotiations that will garner the fruits of the sword and lead us to the haven of permanent peace. That is the criticism I am making. I wish this Government to be official. I bow to constituted authority, whether I agree with it or not. I shall at all times, Mr. President, yield whatever my personal views may be to that authority, to the Secretary of State, to his advisers, to the reports and recommendations of the Diplomatic Service representing us around the world, but I decline to take my orders from men who are neither elected to office nor appointed by men who have been elected, and who could not be elected if they ran on either ticket in any State. Such men represent no constituency and bear no mandate from the governed.

I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to inform my distinguished colleague that I think there has been a misimpression, if I may use that expression, or misinformation conveyed through misunderstanding as to any office being performed by any set of gentlemen collating information as to peace. I have read, as has the Senator, the statement that gentlemen were named with that object in view, and that they were expected to prepare data for that purpose; but I beg to inform my colleague that I understand that that is nothing more than a request to these gentlemen to gather up here and there suggestions made from any source, to collate them, and put them in chronological form, to be given to the President merely for his information that he may upon such data from time to time, if he choose, investigate the subject further, and then present to the Senate, if the occasion should require, any views of his. I beg to assure my colleague that there is absolutely no foundation as I know for the charge which I have seen made that any set of gentlemen have been designated to do any office of the Government to supplant the Senate.

I advise my eminent colleague, historian as he is, that George Washington named a friend whom he trusted to secure information concerning peace. That action was oftentimes duplicated, notably, we remember, by Mr. Cleveland, and particularly under Andrew Jackson. Such things have happened from time to time, a trusted friend or a trusted emissary being used to obtain information to be given to the President from which he could gather further information and transmit it officially.

If I have a wrong view, I shall be surprised; but I think I can assure my colleague that there really is no foundation for the fear which he has expressed and for the accusations to which he naturally had a right to attach importance, having seen them so frequently published.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the gratifying assurance from my colleague falls upon my sensibilities like a blessed benediction, and I am profoundly grateful to have that relieving information. I know the Senator is informed and is sincere. He many times speaks prudently and with authority. I have, however, read in quotation marks from a source that is accessible to the general public, and which has not yet been repudiated, disavowed, modified, or denied, that the conditions which I have just criticized do exist. If, however, this information is erroneous and the conditions are such as the Senator suggests, it only indicates a happier state of affairs which I shall hail with unbounded satisfaction. I shall never be dissatisfied, Mr. President, because fears of mine are not realized. I shall join with my fellow citizens in rejoicing if those fears shall upon further inquiry be found groundless.

I earnestly hope that this may be so. I only know that at the interallied conference of our allies, held in order to unify their activities and to produce better results, no official representative of this Republic met at the table. I only know that authenticated documents in at least two other instances show that diplomatic precedents were set aside and that no person in the Diplomatic Service of this country represented us at the council board. I am not complaining about it. As my colleague says, out of the wealth of his information, which I have always found to be accurate upon those questions, other Presidents have employed personal envoys to gather information and report it to them. So let it be in this case. If it ends there it is well. If, however, it is sought to make the personal envoy the agency for ignoring the diplomatic representatives of this country abroad and the diplomatic representatives are to have no part save as messenger boys or as members of research committees around the world, then we had as well abolish that expensive service and depend upon the personal envoys of the Executive. It would be much more economical. But I remember that in this same interview it was stated that there are too many people running the Government, and that if effectiveness is desired we must reduce the number and get down finally to somebody who settles things—and he is the one. It is to this personal and unofficial method of communicating with foreign countries and of administering the powers of the American people and of communicating the results to the Senate and expecting us to act upon them the instant they are presented that I direct my criticism.

I can well understand, in view of some things that I know—and my colleague knows more of them, I am sure, than I do—and I can well understand, in view of my own information, why the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] urged his cloture rule upon the Senate some weeks ago. It would be a most convenient rule to have when these treaties are to be suddenly ratified, even upon the information of a research committee. Let it be so; grant that it is nothing more, still the brother-in-law of this personal envoy is the actual chairman of that committee.

He is the active energy that gives direction to their activities and advises them how and when and where to go to collect information. When that is done, it is said on the same authority, in quotation marks from the interview, that his mind always runs parallel to the President, or, to turn it around, that he and the President have never yet differed on any vital question.

I can well understand, then, after the investigating committee has collected data in regard to all of the numerous difficulties that may arise in connection with a Balkan province, the territory all the way from the Persian Gulf to the Baltic Sea, the difficulties of Japanese diplomacy, territorial controversies that may come up in Siberia and central and eastern Asia, questions affecting the right of ingress and egress to the Mediterranean and connected waters—all of the multitude of controversies that will arise in the provinces and the different racial and tangled controversies of the Russian Empire as it existed prior to the abdication of the Czar—I can understand all of those matters being handled by this committee on research, that their information will be regarded as final, and must in the nature of things, when presented to the Senate, be final.

I can understand, Mr. President, that when it comes to us in that form he would be a very hardy Senator, indeed, who would refuse to take that information. Haste will be urged; that it will be the means of forfeiting the result of many a hard-fought field if we do not promptly agree. The argument will be that we are hovering on the brink of further offensive operations; that the lives of thousands of our fellow men and of our own countrymen are hanging upon the vote in the Senate; that these wise men have collected the information; that it has been digested and put before us in the form of a treaty; that it is here and we must take it as the net result of the investigation made by the Executive and his personal envoy. If you do not, you, the Members of the Senate here, must take the responsibility for further bloodshed and a renewal of all the horrors that would be involved.

Mr. President, when that time comes, I repeat, he must be a hardy Senator who would refuse to vote for such a treaty. That is the difficulty; that is the reason why I am saying that I wish this Government to return to its official sources for negotiation and action and for communication with the legislative branch of the Government. When that is done, let us have knowledge of matters that are of record—and they can properly be given in executive session, because they can be kept confidential—in the executive department, in the State Department, or in the War Department as to the net results of this research committee.

What are we 96 Senators here for? I have no exaggerated sense of my importance, Mr. President, but on this question I am acting under the oath I took at the desk. I am a Senator of the United States, one of the 96, and I am entitled to as much original information in making up my mind as is this committee or the President's personal envoy, or as is the President himself. That I ask, and I shall be satisfied with nothing less.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I gather from the Senator's remarks that he does not object to the present system provided by our Constitution for the entering into treaties of peace, but his objection goes to the manner in which he seems to think the present Executive intends to execute the power. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is partly correct. The objection is to the form and to the substance as well.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The objection to the manner of executing the power, if I have been able to understand the Senator, rests solely upon the ground that, instead of gaining all the information through diplomatic channels, the President should have indicated his desire that others should engage in the same service in regard to obtaining information. That, I understand, is the gist of the Senator's objection, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a part of the substance. I can not go into it at length under the limitation here, but that is a part of it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he does not feel that when these treaties are to be entered into the President will avail himself of all information that can be obtained through diplomatic channels and have this other information in addition; and whether it is not advisable to get the information from all possible sources; and when the Senate comes to ratify the treaty, does the Senator feel that the President will withhold from the Senate that information, whether it comes from official channels or through any special channel?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; not if we can get it; if it is put before the Committee on Foreign Relations and under proper limitations as to its publicity, the Senate has it made accessible, whether gathered from official and diplomatic sources or from official and personal ones. I am not complaining about information being secured; I am complaining about the utter impracticability in most instances of all Senators having access to that information.

To that information we have a right to have access, and to analyze and think over it before we are called upon to vote. That is what I am complaining about. I am mindful of the fact that many times when the Senate has sought for information the stereotyped reply has been returned that it is "not compatible with the public interest" to give it to us.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes that there should be any change in our constitutional provision with reference to the making of treaties or of the treaty-making power? I think I gather from history that the treaty-making power has been considered one of the prerogatives of sovereignty, and that our constitutional provision is only an innovation to a certain extent. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he would change our constitutional provision so as to popularize, if I may use the expression, the treaty-making power?

Mr. SHERMAN. Originally the treaty-making power was wholly executive; it was wholly in the hands of the monarch, guided by such information as he could get, either from official or unofficial sources. They went upon the idea—and I fear that there be some now in power who are recurring to that aboriginal principle of government—that every reform is an innovation; that every innovation is an error; and that every error, still to quote from the Koran, "leads to hell-fire." Those three steps are a necessary part of the Mohammedan religion, and it seems to me that we are tracing our course in the footsteps of the Orientals. Under their form of government it was the exclusive right of the king or of the executive, in whatever form he exerted power, to negotiate, approve, and ratify treaties; he declared war and, consequently, he made peace. Under our form of Government, to which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has referred, we have taken full power from the Executive in order to popularize somewhat the ancient feature, and vested in the Senate the concurrent power, without which no treaty becomes valid and binding as a part of the law of this Republic. Now, with matters in that condition, I am not complaining about the power, which I recognize as proper and which I think involves a wise division of responsibility; what I complain about, Mr. President, is the form under which that power is exercised at some times, and is perverted and abused at others. It is to that form of exercise of the power and not the criticism of the power that I shall, in due time, and when I am not working under such limitations as I am now, direct my comments.

I agree cordially with my colleague [Mr. LEWIS] for all he has said as to the necessities of an effective peace; I will be found at all times, when the peace problem comes before us, ready and willing by the single vote I have to promote that peace; but, Mr. President, as a condition precedent to any peace negotiations, there is the necessity of unquestioned victory over the public enemy by the military and naval forces of this country and their allies.

Until that time comes we may talk about it, just as we talk about domestic problems, but it is mere talk; everything is futile, so far as final results are concerned.

I differ from the Executive on a good many domestic questions; so far as my limited understanding goes I can not vote with him or for his policies upon many of those internal matters; but when it comes to a question of a permanent peace or when it comes to the question of swift, decided, and victorious war, Mr. President, I will yield, as my colleague will—because we are one upon this question, as I think, fortunately, the Senate is—to no authority in our desire to strengthen the Executive hand and to conduct the struggle to a successful conclusion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the matters which have been discussed this morning are largely problematical. The German peace propaganda is like the intermittent fever; it comes with every disaster to the German arms. I am sure the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] reflected the sentiment of this body, as well as of the people, when he gave warning of its character and of its purpose.

But, Mr. President, I think that the Nation is just now and the allies are just now confronted with a more immediate and sinister danger. I refer to the slowing down of production caused by interferences in production through labor strikes and industrial disturbances. In the month of May there were 160 strikes in our munition plants of different kinds and in June there were 180. There are now a large number of men and women in idleness through labor disturbances, and the wires inform us this morning that 65,000 went out of similar plants in Great Britain on yesterday.

Mr. President, our men are brave and so are the men who constitute the allied armies, from whatever source they come; but bravery is impotent to accomplish results in the absence of military equipment. It is the duty, in my judgment, of the Congress of the United States and of the Executive to look at this immediate danger, and to do what we can to minimize if not to remove it entirely. It is, in my judgment, the one immediate danger to us all, because it is apt to enlarge and increase in its dimensions if matters are permitted to go as they have been permitted to go for many months past.

The junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] very earnestly urged the necessity of properly expending the vast sums of money which we have voted for the prosecution of the war. It is a timely suggestion. We have up to this time expended, I think, within a billion dollars in our one and one-fourth years waging of war of what it has cost Germany since August, 1914, and our resources, great as they are, have their limitations. The matter to which I am directing attention is involved in the question of industrial economy, because efficiency and continued production mean economy; and I very much fear, Mr. President, that unless we pay due heed to the importance of these domestic conditions we may have victory snatched from us in the very hour that it seems inevitable, and that our arms instead of meeting with triumph may be crowned with disaster.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado takes his seat I desire to ask a question. The Senator from Colorado gave some comparison of war expenditures as between Germany and the United States, and stated that within a given time we had expended a certain proportionate sum.

Mr. THOMAS. I was told on yesterday that our expenditures were already within a billion dollars of the total of the expenditures of Germany since August, 1914.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It was that to which I desired to call attention. I did not exactly catch the Senator's suggestion, and I desired to get it correctly.

Mr. THOMAS. I make the statement upon the authority of the gentleman who made it to me; and I think, knowing him as I do, it is reliable.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator from Colorado concludes may I make a further query?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator from Colorado think—I will avow that I think so—that it is time that governmental authority deal justly but firmly with this tremendous waste of our resources?

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with the Senator, and, indeed, I have expressed myself to that effect perhaps with tiresome reiteration in this body for some months past.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [A pause.] If there be none, morning business is closed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order heretofore entered, until Monday, July 29, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 25, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee, our Father in heaven, for the good tidings which have come across the sea from the great battle, which is still raging with no apparent abatement.

We thank Thee that our soldiers and their allies are not only holding their own, but are pressing back the enemy step by step, which warrants the belief that the fortunes of war have turned in our favor.

Continue, we beseech Thee, to support, strengthen, and guide them in their onward progress.

We thank Thee that the American soldiers are measuring up to our expectations and proving themselves worthy of the courage, valor, and patriotism handed down through a long line of patriots.

It is what we confidently expected, and while we may take pardonable pride in their courage, bravery, and skill, deliver us from vain boastings, alike distasteful to the true soldier and his friends. Their deeds speak more eloquently than words.

Continue to bless, guide, and strengthen our arms, that the devoutly prayed for consummation may be realized at no distant date and peace with its blessings may come to all the world; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, July 22, 1918, was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF A PAIR.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to a record of pairs on pages 7491 and 7492 of the RECORD of June 7 last. Ordinarily the pair would be regarded as meaningless but from the fact that I have received a letter which gives an interpretation that is an absolute contradiction of the real circumstance. I am reported as having been paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] on the Smoot amendment to the Sherwood pension bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to correct the RECORD?

Mr. FOCHT. I want to correct the RECORD according to the fact, because it does a great injustice to the gentleman from Ohio and myself. The fact is I was here and voted for the amendment, and, furthermore, I have had no pair except one, which was a political pair.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman wish the RECORD corrected?

Mr. FOCHT. To show that there was no pair at all and that I voted for the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the letter in question has been shown to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am glad to concur in what he has said regarding that pair. There was a very general acquiescence to the amendment when it was returned to the House and there was no partisan division on this merited addition. I have always voted in the House for deserved recognition and appreciation of those who have borne American arms in war, and in this instance I was present and voted for the so-called Smoot amendment, and in agreeing that the RECORD may be corrected in so far as it affects the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I likewise ask that the permanent RECORD be corrected to show that I was present and voted for this pension bill as amended and on final passage.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made. The Chair will state once more that neither the House nor the Speaker has anything on the face of the earth to do with these pairs. They ought to be abolished.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the pair clerks were prohibited from making pairs, except those that were handed to them in writing, would not that obviate the difficulty?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would, and that is what the Chair thinks will be done.

Mr. GARNER. I congratulate the Chair on that decision.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Under the agreement for adjournment three days at a time, is it in order to introduce private bills?

The SPEAKER. They can be introduced, into the basket, but they will go into limbo until the 19th day of August, when the Chair will refer them.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn, to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, July 29, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Resolution of the American Federation of Labor asking for the establishment of a national conservatory of music and art; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of many citizens of New York, asking reduction of fares to persons in the Military Establishment on furlough; also resolution of the National Leather and Shoe Finders' Association for the repeal of the Sherman and Clayton Acts; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a letter from Scovell, Wellington & Co., of Boston, Mass., urging increased appropriations for the United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, resolution of the Genesee Valley Grange, of Scio, N. Y., protesting against the postal-zone law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of the New York Stereotypers' Union, No. 1; Butchers' Union, No. 212, of Brooklyn; New York Photo-Engravers' Union, No. 1; the Pattern Makers' Association of New York and vicinity; the New York Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America; and the Joint Council of the United Cloth Hat and Cap Makers of North America, concerning the Mooney case; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KETTNER: Resolutions of Common Council of the city of San Diego, Cal., and Chamber of Commerce, San Diego, Cal., Melville Klauber, president, in favor of national highways as a war-emergency measure; also resolution of Musicians' Protective Association, Local 325, San Diego, Cal., W. J. Meader, secretary, in favor of House bill 11980, for increasing efficiency of Army bands; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 29, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray Thee to write Thy laws in our hearts and in our minds. Do Thou place them and give us the disposition of obedience that we may learn the will of God by constant attention to all the meanings of Thy providence and by the constant study of Thy revealed word. May we obey Thy word, not being forgetful hearers. Grant that in the obedience which we give to Thee we may find the way of progress and success, of freedom and of universal peace. We thank Thee, O God, that Thou hast given to us to-day tokens of Thy favor. We thank Thee for the victories that have been won. We pray Thee lead on Thy mighty hosts in this world against an organization of ill will against freedom and the people and speedily bring about the time when men shall learn war no more and when peace shall be universal on earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
July 29, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 25, 1918, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

APPROVAL OF HYDROELECTRIC BONDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Capital Issues Committee addressed to the Secretary of the Senate, which will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1918.

DEAR SIR: I transmitted this morning to the Senate, on behalf of the Capital Issues Committee and in response to Senate resolution No. 285, a copy of the record of the district Committee on Capital Issues of San Francisco, relating to the application of the city of Seattle, Wash., for approval by our committee of certain hydroelectric bonds. This copy of the record is the only one in the possession of our committee, and I would ask that we be permitted to take this back and hold it—subject, of course, to the orders of the Senate—for use in the pending hearing upon this application before our committee. If this is not permissible a long delay will be necessitated, as we shall have to obtain from San Francisco another copy. Meantime, the parties are here, and they would have to wait at least a week or 10 days for a new copy.

It will be understood, of course, that all parties interested can use this copy while in our possession as if it were in the immediate possession of the Senate.

Very respectfully, yours,

C. S. HAMLIN, Chairman.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, an arrangement such as is suggested in the communication just read would be entirely satisfactory to me. If it is proper to leave the copy of the documents with the Secretary of the Senate instead of referring the matter to a committee, it will be entirely satisfactory to me. Therefore it will not be necessary to have the communication printed. The purpose of the resolution in response to which the communication is sent is served in that we obtain access to the documents.

Mr. FLETCHER. But does not the communication contemplate having the documents returned to the possession of the committee? They state it is the only copy of the record in their possession.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it contemplates that the copy of the record is now in the possession of the Senate. The committee, however, wants access to it, and this letter, which, as I understand, is addressed to the Secretary of the Senate rather than in the usual form of a letter of transmittal, is simply a request for an arrangement that would be satisfactory to the committee as well as to the city of Seattle, which is interested in this application. It is entirely agreeable to us that the Secretary of the Senate may allow the Capital Issues Committee to have the use of this document, as they state is their desire, so as to save them having a copy brought from San Francisco.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course I have no objection to that request and have no interest in it whatever, but I understood from the reading of the letter that the committee desire to have the document returned to them, as it is the only copy they have in their possession. They suggest that in their office it would be accessible to anyone interested.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They want it returned to them for their use, of course; but they do not want it to go outside of the custody of the Senate—that is, the technical custody of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Washington is mistaken, according to the terms of their letter.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a request, Mr. President, of the committee:

This copy of the record is the only one in the possession of our committee, and I would ask that we be permitted to take this back and hold it—subject, of course, to the orders of the Senate—for use in the pending hearing upon this application before our committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. In other words, it is subject to the order of the Senate; it is entirely in control of the Senate, although they would like to have it back pending the hearings. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is perfectly satisfactory, because the purpose of the resolution which passed the Senate has been served. All we wanted was to get access to this document.

Mr. SMOOT. If it goes back to the committee that will be satisfactory.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be entirely satisfactory that it should go back to the committee subject to the request of the Secretary of the Senate if we should want it brought here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary is directed to return to the Capital Issues Committee the records now in the custody of the Senate and subject to its further orders.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3529) to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907, and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of sundry citizens of Wyoming, favoring the enactment of further prohibition legislation as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Sheridan County Medical Association, of Sheridan, Wyo., favoring the utilization by the Government of the services of women physicians during the present war, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the discrimination of freight rates on grain and grain products, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions adopted by the South Florida Press Association at its semiannual session in Wauchula, Fla., pledging support to the Government in the prosecution of the war, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KENYON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Morning Sun, Iowa, praying for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4849) granting an increase of pension to Salem Bruner (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 4850) to extend all provisions of act 197 of the Laws of the Territory of Hawaii for the regular session of 1917, approved May 1, 1917, to all voters of the Territory of Hawaii called into the active military or naval service of the United States; to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 4851) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Culbertson; to the Committee on Pensions.

VOLUNTEER ENLISTMENTS UNDER DRAFT ACT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the New York Times of yesterday has an article entitled "Drafted men who tried to volunteer," by William H. Crawford. Mr. Crawford in this article goes on to state that he has received letters from all sections of the country commending the view that he had previously expressed, to the effect that a grave injustice is being done to those young men who are barred as volunteers, and yet who were caught by the draft. He states that some of these letters are commendatory of his previous article, and some refer to specific cases of injustice done to men who had sought to volunteer in the service, but who, because of the regulations in regard to physical fitness obtaining at the time they tried to volunteer, were rejected, and yet they were afterwards caught in the draft, the standard of physical fitness having meanwhile been changed. He gives some very strong illustrations showing the injustice of this procedure. He refers, for example, to a man who enlisted in the Marine Corps, although this is aside from the question of physical fitness; but this young man successfully passed his training course; he earned a medal as a sharpshooter; he was transferred from Paris Island, S. C., to Quantico, Va., and while there was called by his local board, who claimed as a reason for the call that they had never received any certificate showing he had been inducted into the Marine Corps service. He was drafted and is now stationed at the Third Battalion of the Fifth Company, One hundred and fifty-second Depot Brigade, Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y.

Another illustration more pertinent to actual conditions is given where a young man tried eight different times to volunteer in the service and was rejected each time because of some physical defect; I think in his case defective eyesight; but after a change in the regulations he is now drafted, though he was not permitted to volunteer.

Mr. Crawford, in the concluding part of his article——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. What the Senator from South Dakota has already read refers to a man in the Marine Corps, which is a branch of the Navy. It seems, for reasons which I do not understand, that while men who are registrants and subject to draft are not taken in the Army as volunteers, the field is open to them all the time to enlist as volunteers in the Navy or in the Marine Corps; in other words, those two branches of the naval service act entirely independent of the Army draft situation. That would probably account for the case which the Senator from South Dakota has just described.

Mr. STERLING. This is a case where the Marine Corps had never sent a certificate stating that this young man had enlisted in that service. The author of the article states, in conclusion:

Surg. Gen. Gorgas, since the subject was first taken up with President Wilson, has issued a standardized physical examination for all branches of the service, and he personally told me that as far as was within his province these injustices would be prevented. Unfortunately, it is not within his jurisdiction to correct those already in effect. These can be corrected only through specific instructions from the War Department, coming through the Provost Marshal General's office. The instructions have not been issued; the wrongs have not been righted. They will be if sufficient interest in the matter is shown by the people. Your Congressman can take it up with the War Department. Many newspapers have published editorials on the subject. By concerted action justice and right may be meted to these lads who, early in the fight, offered their services to the Government.

I am not quite sure whether under the selective-service law there is authority on the part of the War Department——

Mr. WARREN. The authority is with the local board entirely as to the question of physical fitness. Each local board decides that for itself.

Mr. STERLING. Well, each local board will not do justice to those who have already been drafted into the service; and the proposition is to reach the class of men who having been rejected as volunteers because of physical unfitness, now, by reason of the change in the regulation as to physical examinations, are drafted into the service.

Mr. President, in pursuance of this article, I have prepared a resolution, which I offer, to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before the resolution is read I desire to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that this same thing takes place under the operation of the draft itself; that is, a man is rejected under the first call because of a physical disability; he is taken under the next call, and is passed by the board on physical examination. I know of one case of my own personal knowledge where a young man was called under the first draft. On examination the board rejected him on account of a physical defect; but he was taken under the next draft, the board which examined him passing him.

Mr. STERLING. But here is the case of a young man who believed himself to be qualified for a particular branch of the service, and he sought to volunteer in that service. As to whether that young man can be transferred to the volunteer service or to a volunteer regiment is the question; I think if such a thing can be done without great prejudice to the service it ought to be done.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Merely as a matter of information, which may throw some little light upon the subject matter, I desire to say, as is suggested by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], that one of the problems now confronting the Provost Marshal General and, indeed, I think the War Department, is as to the adoption of a new draft law changing the age limit. In the preparation of that particular law unquestionably the matter of whether voluntary enlistments of any sort shall be permitted will be one of the subject matters of investigation. The Senator is quite right in suggesting certain inequalities with respect to the last draft; for instance, where the physical requirements at one time were of one sort and then overnight changed to another sort, so that men who under the original physical requirements were rejected and went on with their usual business and their usual vocations, and married, perhaps, were suddenly, without notice or warning, called by a particular local board and were sent into the draft. It will be recalled that when the draft law was before us one of the arguments made in its behalf was that it was equal and impartial in its operation; that volunteering, on the contrary, was unequal and partial, and that volunteering took the best without, indeed, making all alike amenable to service; but immediately after the draft law was adopted some governmental authority sent its posters all over the land, to which I called attention, and not long ago, in which invidiously it compared volunteering to service under the draft itself. These posters, for instance, unjustifiably and invidiously making a distinction that I observed in this city were couched in language such as this: "Be a went and not a sent," calling upon men thus to volunteer, and this immediately after the arguments that were made concerning the honor of the draft and its equal operation and impartiality.

Now, some of the authorities—and I say this simply for the purpose of enlightenment of the Senator—desire that all volunteering shall be prohibited when we next come—and we are going to come to it within 30 days—to change the draft ages. So I suggest that it is a matter that we all ought to be thinking about, as some of us are endeavoring now to arrive at a just conclusion, whether volunteering shall be permitted at all or whether it shall be permitted concurrently with the draft, or whether it shall be permitted in the Navy and Marine Corps alone. Those are questions that are now being endeavored to be solved, and which some of us are endeavoring to deal with, and we should like, of course, the judgment of the Senator from South Dakota when the time arrives to consider the subject in relation to any change of the draft act.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from California in regard to the inducements held out to men to volunteer instead of waiting to be drafted, and I agree, too, with him that the matter will be a subject for grave consideration when the bill extending the limits of the draft ages is before the Senate.

I offer the resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution (S. Res. 288) was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas it appears that many young men who sought to enter the military service of the United States during the present war by volunteering for some particular branch of the service at a time before the present fixed standard for physical fitness had been established were rejected by medical boards on the ground of physical unfitness and many of those so rejected have since been drafted and under the now established standard of physical fitness for all branches of the service have been accepted and called into the service as drafted men; and

Whereas also there appear to be cases where there having been a failure to certify lawful volunteer enlistments to local draft boards, such local boards have assumed jurisdiction to require the discharge of such volunteers and have subjected them to call as drafted men; and

Whereas such course of procedure has apparently wrought injustice not only to the volunteer as such, but especially to the young man who desired volunteer enrollment in a particular branch of the service for which he deemed himself best fitted but which is now denied him: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be respectfully requested to inform the Senate whether in his opinion permission given to men subjected to draft under such or similar circumstances to now volunteer or permission for their assignment to volunteer regiments would materially affect or impair the service, whether or not the War Department contemplates any action looking to a transfer of such men to the volunteer service, and whether in the opinion of the Secretary such transfer is permissible under existing law.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the complaints to which reference has been made arise not so much from the rules which have been established as from the administration of those rules. Each local board has a physician appointed, who passes upon the physical qualifications of the men drafted by that board. It is like grading wheat—it is a matter of judgment with the local draft-board physicians. Some of them take a very narrow view and are not disposed to exclude anybody if he is in fairly good physical condition, while others are very technical, and if they find the slightest defect they reject a man. Sometimes, also, there is favoritism. I am inclined to think, from the experience I have had and from some correspondence which has come to me, that a good deal of the trouble about the physical examination comes from the methods employed by the local boards. They are our representatives, and you can readily see, Mr. President, as can anyone who reflects upon the matter, that the decision is largely in their hands. While the department may lay down general rules, yet the medical men on the various local boards use their own judgment in the application of the rules, and hence there is diversity.

I have discovered another thing. A great many who want to volunteer instead of waiting for the draft—it is not so in the cases cited, but is so in most of the cases disclosed by my correspondence—are men who are looking for some "soft snap" in the service, some place where they will not get into the fighting line. They are very anxious to volunteer and to escape the draft for the purpose of enlisting in some particular service where they may run automobiles for officers or do some other work not requiring them to be on the fighting line. Many of the men with whom I have been in communication have been of that class. They are very anxious to get into the service—God knows they all announce that they are willing to serve their country—but they want to get into some branch of the service where they do not have to go into the trenches and meet the enemy face to face.

In this connection, Mr. President, I wish to read an article which I clipped from the Washington Post this morning. It is as follows:

MARINE HEROES MERE BOYS—MORE THAN 13,000, A THIRD OF THE CORPS, UNDER 21, AND GALLANT FIGHTERS.

More than 13,000 marines, about one-third the number that have joined the corps since the beginning of the war, are boys between 18 and 21 years. Can they fight? Let the following official statement from Secretary Daniels tell the story:

"The policy of the Marine Corps in admitting boys of 18 years into the ranks is more than justified, officers claim, by the heroic fighting by the marines at Chateau-Thierry and Belleau Wood, the showing they made in their sector of the Marne line since that time, and the youthfulness of many of the marines who have been decorated and cited in France.

"While it was known that many boys under 21 were serving with the sea soldiers, the statement that they aggregated nearly one-third of the enlistments was a surprise even to marine officers themselves."

I read this to show that boys from 18 to 21 make the very best soldiers; I read it for the purpose of quieting the nerves of those who think that it is a mistake to take into the service one under 21 years of age. We want good soldiers, fighting soldiers, and there are none better than the boys from 18 to 21. No part of our Army in France has made a better showing than those young marines who fought "over there" in the front of the line. The University of Minnesota contributed in one group more than 100 boys to the Marine Corps, all under 21. I can not understand the sentiment that seems to prevail in some quarters that it is a harmful thing to let boys volunteer, that all should be drafted, and that no volunteering should be allowed. I do not see why we should enact a law to calk up the patriotism of the American boys. If we have boys who are anxious to volunteer for the service, especially the fighting line, I certainly think there ought not to be any legislation to prohibit their doing so. Nor do I think that anything ought to be allowed to interfere with the draft, which is intended to reach everybody.

It is apparent now, from our experience, that without the draft law we never would have succeeded in the same period of time in raising as large an army as we now have. The spirit that imbued our people in 1861 did not seem to prevail amongst them at the beginning of this war, so it became necessary to have the draft law, and it has been one of the most equitable and fairest laws of the kind ever devised. It is infinitely preferable to the draft law we had in the last days of the Civil War. Under that villainous system men who were drafted could hire substitutes. Towns would vote bonds, cities would vote bonds, and men would raise money themselves, go to the large cities, and hire the odds and ends of humanity, all kinds of people, and pay them a big bounty to act as their substitutes. Growing out of that practice we had another class of men who came to be known as "bounty jumpers," many of whom were men who had been hired as substitutes. We have nothing of that kind under this law. Taken altogether, it seems to me that it has worked out as well as any law can work.

Of course in the administration of the law the work has been performed largely by the local boards without compensation and mistakes may have been made; but it seems to me it is to the great credit of our people that they have done such magnificent work on the local district boards without compensation and have done it so well. While there may have been instances where a board has erred or where the medical members of boards may have erred, taken on the whole and in the aggregate I think we must all agree that the administration of the draft law has been a wonderful success.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has read an excerpt from a morning paper in regard to the fighting ability displayed by our Marines across the sea. That they are brave and able fighting men has never been questioned by anyone so far as I know, but there seems now to be a tendency throughout the country, and it is noticeable also here, to reduce the draft age below 21 and down to as low as 18 years. The sole excuse for that seems to be that men of 18 years will also fight like heroes on any battle field. Those who advocate the reduction of the age limit to 18, however, do not seem to take into consideration whether there is any justice in the proposal and whether or not there is any fairness to that class of men who are also citizens of the country. That is a question that must be determined when the draft age is changed, if changed it must be, and I think it will be. It will be changed, however, not because there is necessity for it from the standpoint that we have exhausted the man power already registered; not at all; but because there are certain men above the present draft age who are without burdensome obligations and without dependents as much so as are those of the first class who should be required to serve rather than some who have more obligations to society and more dependents.

So far as I am concerned, I think the draft law has resulted admirably in its application. I was one of those who favored the volunteer system. I believed that the military achievements of this country in the past and its glory rested upon the volunteer system; that the history of the fighting volunteer soldier, the history of the volunteer army, was the history of America's military prowess and glory. I do not think there is any question about that.

There was no call for volunteers in this war, and the reason for it was said to be that "we want the service to bear equally upon all; that the Government shall say to all men, Stand here in line and we will take such of you as we regard to be necessary for the protection of the country, and there will be no room for invidious distinction then between those who volunteer and those who are drafted.'" Immediately after the draft law was passed, as the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has suggested, from certain quarters—official, too—a proposal was widely announced making that very distinction. They said: "Volunteer now lest you be drafted, lest the odium of the draft attach to you." That ought never to have been done; it ought not to be done hereafter, and must not be done, so far as official approval, or anything like that, is concerned.

I do not believe that the draft law should be changed reducing the age limit. Why? Because there are men enough already registered to put 5,000,000 men into the Army across the sea; there are men enough already accepted to do that. If we shall reduce the draft age, what is going to be the result of it? Since we have already authorized those men to be classified and to be called into the service by classes there will never be many more men above 21 years of age put into the Army. That is my judgment. You will compose your Army hereafter of men from 18 to 21 years. You will have a good Army? Yes. A brave Army? Yes. An effective fighting Army? Yes. A great machine? Certainly. But will you be treating these men of 18 to 21 years fairly? Will you be treating these men fairly who have never had opportunity to develop themselves, to build homes and fortunes, and to pursue happiness in this country of ours? No; it is not right, and it ought not to be done; they must not be put into the firing line to the exclusion of other men who have lived longer under our civilization and laws; who have married their wives, who have made their fortunes, who have, forsooth, attained and enjoyed happiness, and who have a greater interest in protecting the country than the man who has not had his chance.

I say the men from 18 to 21 years of age will be needed for the development of this country 8 to 10 years from now as much as or more than the men between 25 and 35 who have already had their opportunity. Let us be fair to the man who has no voice in the Government and has never been allowed to say whether he shall do this or do that. We who are allowed to vote, we who are allowed to make the laws, owe that much to him, and it must be done, so far as I am concerned.

THE SOCIALIST PARTY AND THE WAR.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if there are no further remarks to be made by Senators on the matter that has just been discussed, I wish to preserve, against the day when I anticipate it will be needed, certain communications, or the abstracts thereof, which have come to me from time to time.

The Socialist Party from its national office, Chicago, Ill., has issued the following statement of its purposes and beliefs on war questions:

We indorse unreservedly the peace program of the Russian Bolshevist Government.

We emphatically deny that it is necessary for the people of the United States to spill their blood and waste their treasure to rearrange the map of Europe. If rearrangement is necessary, it can be more speedily and more effectively accomplished by the peace conference.

The present situation demands more than the mere statement of war aims or peace terms. An agreement to enter into peace negotiations is now imperative.

We earnestly urge you to recognize officially the present Russian Government and to accept its invitation to take part in the peace conferance of the Russian and the central powers. We also urge you to make every effort to secure the participation of the allies in the conference. This is the road to peace.

The foregoing appeal is dated February 9, 1918, and addressed to the President and Congress of the United States.

Ten days after this appeal the Russian Bolsheviki Government capitulated and surrendered to Germany. We find Lenine February 23, 1918, announcing to his brother Bolshevists that—we are compelled to submit to a distressing peace. Their knees are on our chest and our position is hopeless.

The Chicago appeal is signed by Morris Hillquit, Victor L. Berger, and others of the national executive committee.

June 30, 1918, the Socialist Party of New York State held its annual convention. Morris Hillquit, addressing that body, said:

The crisis in Russia marked the birth of a new proletarian republic—the first in the history of the world.

He referred to the I. W. W. defendants in Chicago trials, and said he was asked while there "if it were true that the Socialist Party was supporting the I. W. W." He pleaded guilty and promised that "the Socialists would stand behind the I. W. W. men with all their hearts and souls."

The proletarian Russian Republic, acting through the Soviets, accepted peace terms and sent delegates to Brest-Litovsk. Under this peace Germany has disintegrated Russia, destroyed its Government, occupied territory, and subjugated its people from the German frontier to the Arctic Circle.

The decree issued by the executive committee of the Russian Soviet recently declares:

All State loans concluded by the governments of the Russian landlords and Russian burgeoise enumerated in a special list are hereby repudiated as from December 14, 1917. The December coupons of these loans are not paid. All foreign loans, without exception, are absolutely repudiated; short-term liabilities and treasury bonds remain in force; poorer citizens who hold State bonds of internal loans to amount of not more than 10,000 rubles nominal will receive in exchange certificates made out in their name of a new loan of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic; the Soviets in agreement with the local economic councils appoint committees to determine what citizens are to be regarded as poor. These committees have the right to annul all savings not acquired by personal labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed, and the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement, stands adjourned until Thursday at 12 o'clock noon.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, August 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 29, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, in whom the issues of life are centered, hear and answer our prayer if it shall be in consonance with Thy will and good purposes.

Behold, we know not anything;
We can but trust that good shall fall
At last—far off—at last, to all.
And every winter change to spring.

The past and present are but the guaranties of our future.

We thank Thee for the encouraging words which come to us from the great battle field where right is pitted in deadly conflict with wrong.

We thank Thee that the American soldier is holding fast to the traditions which have been handed down from our fathers. He does not fight for the sake of fighting but for the hallowed principles vouchsafed to him by the decrees of high Heaven.

Strengthen his arm in the present crisis and bring to him a victory which shall establish a world-wide peace, and thus make the world a safer place for Thy children to dwell in; that the pursuits of peace may bring righteousness and joy to every heart, for which the Cross of Christ has been made the token; and all praise be Thine, our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 25, 1918, was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 3529. An act to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY NEXT.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, August 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting tentative draft of a bill to provide method of settlement for materials, stores, and supplies transferred between different bureaus, departments, or agencies of the Government (H. Doc. No. 1247); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting tentative draft of a bill authorizing an Army account of advances for Army appropriations (H. Doc. No. 1248); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of the secretary and the treasurer of the American Red Cross for the period January 1 to June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1249); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Carrie E. Pierce and Alice Pierce, children and sole heirs of James H. Pierce, deceased, against The United States (H. Doc. No. 1250); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Frank A. Baker, son of John J. Baker, deceased, against The United States (H. Doc. No. 1251); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BESHLIN: Petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, urging the passage of immediate war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of sundry citizens of Waukesha, Wis., also of members of the Pentecostal Church, of Racine, Wis., favoring war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PRATT: Petitions for war-time prohibition filed by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Horseheads, the Free Methodist Church of Corning, and sundry citizens of Horseheads, all in the State of New York; also resolutions in relation to polygamy adopted at public meetings in Elimira and Elmira Heights, N. Y.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of sundry citizens of Page County, Iowa, for a bill to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 1, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the high sense of moral obligation that Thou hast given to us as a Nation. Thou hast written Thy laws in our hearts. Thou hast given to us our freedom. Thou hast put into our hearts a love for freedom better than life. To-day, in the midst of the bitterest struggle of all the country's history, we come before Thee asking for Thy guidance and Thy blessing. We pray Thee to lead on our boys to victory. Bring them safely back to our native shores with the glory of having achieved not only honor for their country but the advancement of the cause of righteousness and peace among men. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
August 1, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF LAFAYETTE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication, which will be read:

The communication was read by the Secretary, as follows:

To the President, the members of the Cabinet, the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and the nations of the allies, cordial greeting:

It is proposed to have an anniversary celebration of the birthday of the illustrious Lafayette on the 6th of September, 1918, at 8 p. m., at Memorial Continental Hall.

In view of the entrance of the United States, with France, Belgium, England, Italy, Greece, and the other allies, in the present war, it is considered most appropriate that we do special honor at this time to the memory of Lafayette and to France.

Therefore we most earnestly extend an invitation to all the nations of the allies to participate in the coming event. Please answer.

Very truly, yours.

J. G. B. BULLOCH, M. D., Chairman,
The Octavia, 1669 Columbia Road NW.

PHOSPHATE ROCK (S. DOC. NO. 270).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of July 5, 1918, a memorandum from the Chief of the Bureau of Soils containing the information available in the Department of Agriculture concerning phosphate rock, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

PETITION.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Billings, Mont., praying for a Federal investigation of the present high prices of petroleum products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4852) to create an executive department in the Government to be known as the Department of Aeronautics, and for the appointment of a Secretary of Aeronautics and an Assistant Secretary, and providing for appropriations for said department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH (for Mr. HOLLIS):

A bill (S. 4853) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Moody (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4854) to repeal a certain provision of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, relating to the sale of lands in the Uintah Indian Reservation in Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

ADDRESSES BEFORE THE IOWA BAR ASSOCIATION.

Mr. KENYON. I ask to have printed separately as a public document two addresses delivered before the Iowa State Bar Association, one by the president of that association, Judge Charles W. Mullan, on allegiance to the Constitution, and the other by Rome G. Brown, of Minneapolis, Minn., on the disloyalty of socialism. I presume that the request must be referred to the Committee on Printing, and I ask that that reference be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The addresses will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

TRANSPORTATION SERVICE AND DIFFUSION OF FACTORIES.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there has come to my notice a very ably written article—one which relates to a very vital question before the country to-day. The article that I refer to is by C. C. McChord, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a member of the Railroad Wage Commission, and also recently appointed by the President as one of the umpires of the National War Labor Board. His vast experience in the great number of years he has served as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission peculiarly qualifies him for a discussion of the subject he has taken up.

He charges directly that a congestion has been brought about in certain sections of this country and at the same time a depletion in other sections of the country relative to population and industry through artificial means, through preferences, through prejudicial action against other sections, and that practically all has been accomplished through the wrongful use of the privilege relation to transportation in this country.

If that charge were made by some ordinary economist or by a politician or by one who might be denominated a statesman other than a member of the great body that for years has been invested with the power of investigation in these matters I doubt not that the party making the charge would be denominated a demagogue.

It has been apparent to shippers and producers throughout the country away from the great centers of industry and commerce that this discrimination was practiced, and during all those years they have protested, and never once has there been a remedy. I want to say that Mr. McChord, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, has time and again pointed out the remedy, and time and again stood for the remedy, but apparently he was unable to force his opinion upon a majority of the commission.

The fact remains, as stated in this article, that these artificial conditions have compelled manufacturers to leave the natural field of their operations where the raw product and everything else was at hand and go to certain large centers of commerce, because those centers of commerce were favored to such an extent by the railroad companies that the manufacturing interests elsewhere could not compete.

He calls attention to this fact not primarily for the purpose of attacking conditions that existed in transportation service but for the purpose of warning our Government and those connected with it that it is now time to commence to prepare for after-war conditions. He calls attention to the fact that wages are constantly increasing, and that when the war is over, in the very necessity of the case, those wages will decrease by reason of the fact that hundreds of thousands of men who are now employed in special war work will have to seek other kinds of employment.

There will be a resistance to the decrease in wages by these employees naturally, unless the cost of living is proportionately or fairly proportionately decreased.

Mr. McChord takes the view that that can not be accomplished unless labor is scattered throughout the country and finds its occupation in the vicinity of the necessary foodstuff supplies, and unless the congestion in the great cities is relieved and men are permitted to find laborers in the great open where rents are sufficiently reasonable for a man to house his family.

Possibly at the present time, because of the urgent demands of the war, it is impracticable, if not impossible, to take the necessary steps to immediately remedy these conditions. It is obvious, of course, to any man who has studied business conditions that great production and efficiency in production are accomplished under the direct supervision of the managers of industry. We understand that one great factory in this country could possibly become more efficient than a thousand scattered throughout the country. We are told, for instance, that in the manufacture of aeroplanes it is essential that they be manufactured in the vicinity of the board having charge of such factories so that they may constantly inspect the work. That may be all true, yet I doubt whether the advantage obtained by such immediate inspection is equal to the advantage that would be derived from keeping your men scattered throughout the country where they would be locally supplied with the necessaries of life.

Be that as it may we are not dealing with that subject matter now. The problem is coming on us soon. The conditions that are causing the congestion now, and that have caused the congestion in the great cities of this country for years, is not decreasing but is steadily increasing. Great factories are being built in certain sections because they can not be built anywhere else and compete. As the factories grow men are drawn from all over the country to those factory towns, and as they are drawn there and labor becomes more plentiful at such points, again do the factories increase and the cumulative process ever continues.

The result is inevitable. It means that a great country that is not only fit to live in but is the most wholesome place in the world in which to live is absolutely abandoned.

Not only that, but the men who could be fed close to the farms must have their food transported clear across the country at the expense of the people and to the obstruction of the railroads that are the arteries of trade.

We all know what is meant by the long and short haul. We all know what is meant by the back haul. We know that the railroad companies would ship freight from Chicago to San Francisco cheaper than they would ship to intermediate points. We know they would ship freight cheaper from Chicago to San Francisco or Sacramento than to Reno, Nev.

Mr. KING. Or to Salt Lake City.

Mr. PITTMAN. Or to Salt Lake City, or to Ogden, and just as cheap as they ship it to Denver. We all know that they would charge more to deliver freight from the town of Ogden to a point 25 miles out than they would charge to deliver it from San Francisco to the same point; that they would charge more to deliver freight from Reno to a place 25 miles out of Reno along the railroad than they would from San Francisco to the same point, and yet San Francisco would be 300 miles away. Why? For the very purpose of giving San Francisco that field of trade and depriving the local States of the same trade. This means that Nevada wheat, wool, meats, hides, and other products must go to San Francisco for manufacture or reshipment. It means that no important manufacturing plant or wholesale establishment can exist in Nevada.

I do not know whether the railroads are to blame in the matter or not. I have often doubted it. Take a center like San Francisco, where five or six great railroads concentrate, and if one railroad company says, "We will do away with this discrimination," then the chamber of commerce, representing the business interests of San Francisco, says to the other railroad companies, "We will give you all our business."

I presume competition between the railroad companies in these great centers has compelled them to listen to the selfishness of business men of those communities. I am not condemning these men or bodies, but I am condemning the conditions that permitted such great wrong to be done a community and permanent injury to our whole country through the misuse of public utilities.

When there was a hearing with regard to the increased rate to Pacific port points, and when the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco fought that raise, one of the attorneys for the railroad companies said, "Yes; we have built up San Francisco by discrimination against interior points, and if you are going to oppose fair rates to San Francisco we will build up our interior country, which is not in competition with water rates." They have always had the power to build up the interior country. The interior country needed no assistance. All that was needed was to throw down the artificial barriers to trade and it would seek its proper point of operation. Under private ownership it never could be accomplished, because the law of competition, the law of self-aggrandizement, the ambition for personal profit of the railroad companies, always stood in the way of carrying out the higher idea in building up the roads of this country.

When the great congestion took place along our railroads a few months ago the railroads were thrown under the management of a railroad board composed of railroad men, and yet such board was powerless to remedy the condition. Why? Because each of these great railroads was fighting for all the business it could get, no matter how the country might suffer. So they reached out and they took that business, and they tied up the great center of New York City, and the sidetracks were congested for hundreds of miles. It was a personal greed. It was the desire of personal profit that interfered with the matter.

The railroad companies went into the hands of the Government, which did not care whether the freight went over the Pennsylvania or the Michigan Central or the Southern or the Baltimore & Ohio. In other words, when these roads went into the hands of the Government instead of having 100 competing lines whose only object was personal power and profit we obtained one great system whose only object was transportation in the interest of the people of the country.

Under Government control there will be no more bonuses, no more favoritism, no more special rates, no back-haul charges, no preferential rates or discriminatory charges.

There will be no desire to drive water transportation out of business. It will be the object of the Government to encourage that form of transportation that can best serve the people.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator think that the freight or passenger service is now better than it was before the Government took charge of the railroads?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I had just stated that but a few months prior to the taking over of the railroads by the Government the congestion of our lines had reached such an extent that starvation faced communities in this country, and I tried to state my opinion as to why it occurred, and the opinion given in this article, which is far superior to any statement I could make, is to the effect that great lines like the New York Central and the Pennsylvania had reached out with their tentacles throughout the country and dragged the freight across those lines through their great power of business to the exclusion of other lines and congested the great port of New York while other ports had ample facilities.

Now, that has been remedied since the Government took charge of the roads. I consider it a great benefit to this country to relieve that congestion. I consider that the freight conditions in this country are 100 per cent better than they were before the Government took charge of the roads.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator how he reconciles his statement with the fact that before the Government took charge of the railways I got freight from Chicago to Washington in 30 days. That was a delayed service because of war conditions, and we expected some delays. I ordered a certain piece of freight, which was shipped from Chicago last February. I got it on the 19th of July, 1918. It was in transit five months.

Mr. PITTMAN. What was its character?

Mr. SHERMAN. The package of freight was made up in a car, and the car was lost between here and Chicago.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I ask what was the character of the freight?

Mr. SHERMAN. Dead freight; bookcases.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is not any question, Mr. President, in my opinion, that you may find isolated cases such as the Senator from Illinois has mentioned in which there has been great delay, and, in my opinion, there should have been even greater delay. Our Government at the present time is more interested in the transportation of food and ammunition and farm products and implements of war and our soldiers, a necessary part of the transportation, than it is in transporting bookcases for lawyers.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. The transportation of food is worse than the transportation of dead freight or nonperishable articles. It is impossible to get a barrel of apples or potatoes from Chicago, Ill., into Washington, and has been since the Government took charge of the railroads, in a condition where they are edible. It takes all the way from two months to get them. Before that time, since the war was declared, I was able to get provisions from the Mississippi Valley or from Chicago or interior points near there in a condition where they were fit to eat. I am saying nothing about the military service, but making proper allowances I do not believe a barrel that is edible when it reaches here has come to any private consumer in Washington because of the great delays. The same conditions did not prevail since war was declared before the Government took over the railroads.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have not heard of any lack of apples from any part of the country. I have seen the market filled with apples here. Possibly there has been some choice brand that the Senator from Illinois raises in his garden that the railroads heretofore brought to him. I regret the misfortune of the Senator from Illinois, not only this misfortune but the other misfortune to which he is subject, but nevertheless the fact remains that the railroads are not congested at the present time, and there is no complaint in regard to the movement of the necessities of war to the people who need them. That is the situation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The express companies are moving on this same line. I left on my desk when I came over here a postal card making inquiry if I had received a lot of sausage sent from a point in Rhode Island on the 14th of January. Of course, I had not received it. Yesterday I had to sign an affidavit before a notary about some shirts that I had ordered which were to be sent on the 1st of June and were shipped according to the statement on the 13th or 14th of June, and they have not arrived. I learned from the West that it is confusion worse confounded there. It was enough congested before the Government took hold of it, but in the particular case in which I am interested it is far worse now.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. McChord is dealing with one of those very questions. He is trying to arrange it so that persons may get supplies without having to send a thousand miles away. They are trying to fix it so that workingmen will get their supplies without having to send a thousand miles away for them.

Let me say this in all seriousness. It is certainly a trivial argument at this time in answer to the great article presented here by the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission for gentlemen to get up here and say they could not get a barrel of apples from Chicago or a case of sausage from Rhode Island. Now, there was a time when the railroad companies were run in the interest of such gentlemen. There was a time when possibly a man would not eat sausage unless it came from Rhode Island or apples unless they came from Illinois. At the present time there is not the congestion with regard to necessities that existed at the time the railroads were taken over. You have not 100 miles of cars jammed along the sidetracks of this country.

Mr. SMOOT. There were last winter, though.

Mr. PITTMAN. Next winter you may croak, but at the present time we are discussing last winter, which is a reality. They were digging coal at the sidetracks with picks, and there was not room to put another car there. There was not a member of this body but admitted that the unfortunate coal condition was due to transportation, and it was due to congestion of transportation more than anything else. Now, in fact, within 30 days after the Government took charge of these roads the congestion was removed and for good. Senators complain that they have personally suffered some inconvenience. Yes; we are all suffering inconvenience. It is a time when we should suffer inconvenience, some little inconvenience like the loss of a barrel of apples, without any extraordinary complaint. When we realize, if we do realize, the suffering of hundreds of thousands and millions of our boys in France to-day, it seems unhappy for a man to stand here and argue that the great consideration here is his personal feeling with regard to a barrel of apples or a case of sausage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to what the Senator has stated, but the Senator must know that in the hot days of July and the hot days of August, so far as the transportation of coal is concerned, it is quite different from what it was in the cold days of December and January.

I wish to say to the Senator, with all due respect to what he has already said, that unless something takes place between now and the 1st day of December the sidetracks will be jammed with cars of coal again and the people of the United States will be freezing at least as much as they did last winter. After the Government took over the railroads there was no improvement in the transportation of freight until after warm weather came, when coal was not in such demand as it had been during the winter, thus greatly relieving transportation conditions. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not believe that if the railroads were under the same management as they were before the Government took them over—I mean as far as passenger travel is concerned—there would be a rebellion against such service as is now provided for the traveling public. The people of the United States would not stand for the service by the railroads as far as passenger traffic is concerned that they are receiving to-day under Government control from any corporation, person, or company that might operate a railroad.

The people of America are willing to put up with the service they are receiving to-day only because it is furnished by the Government. Trains have been taken off by the hundreds and the accommodations that are furnished the people by the railroads are nothing compared with what they were before the roads were taken over by the Government. It is true that wages have been advanced and no doubt will be again before the next election.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator asks the question in the nature of a complaint or a comment. It is true that the passenger service of the country is not as extensive as it was by any means. As a matter of fact, there have been a number of de luxe trains laid off entirely and instead of those trains there have been put on some very common cars to carry soldiers and plain people. That is a very annoying thing. The Senator from Utah and I both suffer. We found it not as luxurious traveling as we had. The service is not there and I am not complaining of it either. I would have all the service set aside if it would in any way enhance the transportation of commodities or materials required for war purposes.

And now I come to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. Even if the railroad companies before the Government took them over had taken off these de luxe trains and had given the service and charged the passenger rates we have now and had thereby increased the necessary freight traffic, I do not believe there would have been any riot or rebellion in this country as suggested by the Senator from Utah. I have too high a regard for the patriotism of the people of this country.

But the trouble was here: The railroad companies could not accomplish that purpose. They were in competition with each other, and none of them dared to cut down passenger traffic for fear of losing business and injuring their road. That is where the Government of the United States has the advantage. I want to say, in my opinion, no matter what the Senator from Utah may think of the result of the operation of these roads, 90 per cent of the people of this country favor now and will continue to favor the Government control of the railroads of this country as a permanent institution.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take up any more time of the Senate, but this article deals with the subject I have been discussing in a general way, and I discuss it in a general way so that the Senate may have full information in regard to it.

I ask that this article by Mr. McChord, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, dealing with not only the railroad situation but with the general congestion of the country and with the necessity of preparation for after-war conditions, be published in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and be published as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is objection. I will say to the Senator if he wants to make the article a part of his remarks at this time I shall not object, but to have it go into the RECORD and be printed as a public document I shall object.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course I may give more importance to the article than it deserves, but I do not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator it has been the rule of the Committee on Printing, and I know of no case, unless it was a message to Congress from the President of the United States or an address by the President of the United States, where a request has been granted to print in the RECORD and as a public document. That has been the practice adopted—to print in one way or the other but not in the RECORD and as a public document. I say to the Senator that that has been the policy generally in the past in the House and in the Senate, and at this particular time if the Senator desires to have it made a part of his speech I shall not object.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks that the article referred to be printed as a part of his remarks in the RECORD. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 28, 1918.]

DIFFUSION OF FACTORIES TO COUNTRY POINTS WILL OPEN AFTER-WAR AVENUE TO SOLDIER; RAILROADS MUST AID EFFORT, SAYS MCCHORD—CENTRALIZATION OF MANUFACTURING PLANTS IN BIG CITIES DUE LARGELY TO REBATES AND UNFAIR PRACTICES OF CARRIERS, COMMISSIONER SHOWS—ABANDONMENT OF WATER TRANSPORTATION DUE TO FIERCE COMPETITION OF RAILS FOR BUSINESS—EFFECT HAS BEEN TO OVERCROWD CITIES AND RETARD DEVELOPMENT OF COUNTRY—MOVEMENT TO RURAL SECTIONS WOULD BENEFIT NATION IN RAISED STANDARDS OF CITIZENSHIP—4,000,000 RETURNING TO PEACE PURSUITS MUST BE PROVIDED FOR.

The following analysis of after-the-war problems, with constructive suggestions for their solution, has been prepared by C. C. McChord, of Kentucky, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a member of the Railroad Wage Commission, and recently appointed by the President one of the umpires of the National War Labor Board:

"It was Macauley or some other essayist who wrote some 75 years ago that the new form of government in America was on trial. He was of opinion that no government so democratic in form could long endure. He declared that the supreme test would come when there were more mouths to eat breakfasts than breakfasts to supply them, and that in such a crisis the autocratic power of a sovereign would be found necessary. The test of this prophecy may be at hand, though in a somewhat modified form. In any event, just at this time the thought is sufficient to give us pause to take an account of stock.

"Thoughtful and prudent men are looking forward to a reorganization of industrial, social, and economic conditions in this country and throughout the world when a treaty of peace has been signed that shall bring the war to an end. Vast armies and navies are then to be demobilized and the soldiers and sailors of which they are comprised returned as quickly as possible to peaceful pursuits. The reabsorption into productive industries of 4,000,000 men or more drilled in the arts of war must in some way be accomplished. At the same time millions of employees in great munition plants and other industries, engaged chiefly in producing the necessities of war, will have to be diverted to the production of the things needed in times of peace. The problem is how this may be done in a way that shall be reasonably satisfactory to the workers of the country and at the same time shall not lead to an interim of stagnation of production and business. In other words, the change must, if possible, be brought about so as to secure for the future the greatest good to the greatest number.

"The transition from a war to a peace basis must not be left to chance. Comprehensive plans of reconstruction should be formulated at once, and the perfection thereof entered upon with as much earnestness and vigor as we entered upon the business of stamping out of autocratic military despotism as represented by the rulers of the German peoples.

"An institution in this country engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war employed a total of 6,000 persons previous to the year 1915. On January 1, 1918, this concern had more than 60,000 employees upon its pay rolls. This is representative of many similar industries, and comparable increases have been experienced in all manufacturing concerns engaged in producing the necessaries of war, and this embraces nearly all industries in the country. The iron and steel mills have been running night and day for the past two years with largely increased capacity. At the same time there has been increase after increase in wages until to-day the rate of pay for artisans of every kind is on a higher scale than ever known.

"Some idea of the amount of these increases may be gained from a showing of the aggregate payments by representative manufacturing establishments reporting to the Department of Labor of the United States. For a week in April, 1915, 533 institutions reported an aggregate payment of $6,396,574, and for a week in April, 1916, the same institutions reported $9,429,659. For a week in April, 1917, 670 institutions reported an aggregate payment of $16,228,190, and for a week in April, 1918, the same institutions reported $20,412,347.

"It is certain that workmen who have had opportunity to enjoy life as the result of adequate pay are not going to consent to, if they can avoid it, any reduction in their wage scale unless there are compensating benefits. It is equally certain that the era of extremely high prices for the necessities of life will not continue during times of peace. The great class of nonproducers represented by clerks in offices and stores, salaried men in every calling, employees of public utilities, and the like can not long continue to pay ever-increasing living costs, except they, too, receive further material increases in rates of pay.

"The readjustment that is to take place after the business in hand is disposed of is world-wide in extent. International relationships must be reestablished on new bases, foreign commerce must be fostered and encouraged, and national solidarity as the consistent policy of over 100 years of our national life is to be abandoned and an entry into the great family of nations accomplished. All this calls for the exercise of the wisest diplomacy and statesmanship.

"There are some conditions peculiar to our own country that call for immediate action if they are to be made consistent with that readjustment which shall permit of progress in a way of broader and better national life.

"What is needed in this country is a wider diffusion of manufacturing industries and the local supply of the necessaries of life. Products of our factories are distributed throughout the land, but under circumstances of such economic waste as to demand a radical change. In the development of manufacturing many elements have conspired to confine factories to limited territories or particular cities. There has always been a desire upon the part of our people to locate the factory near the region of supply. As our Middle Western and border Southern States began to be developed after the Civil War, the constant effort of the smaller cities and towns was to secure factories of various kinds. There is hardly a town of 1,000 population or more in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky, Virginia, and West Virginia that from 1875 to 1895 did not endeavor to secure manufacturing industries. During that period, by the payment of large bonuses, or offers of free taxes, coal, and water, many of them secured the location of factories that gave promise of affording cheap material for home consumption, and a distribution of the surplus to neighboring towns. Many of these factories proved to be failures, and a ride over the country to-day discloses crumbling buildings and smokestacks in many towns and villages as grim monuments of the dead hopes of their projectors. Not all of these were properly located, many of them were the result of the dreams of some inventor of a short cut to wealth, but most of them should have survived, and would have done so except that influences were at work that made success impossible. Among the chief of these was the fact that the railroads favored certain manufacturing centers in the way of facilities and rates.

"The freight traffic manager's business was to secure tonnage for the particular railway by which he was employed. Long hauls in large lots afforded attractive business that added to the aggregate of the returns to the carrier from his efforts and led to his preferment by those higher up in the control and management of the road. Competition for business at points reached by several railroads was keen and incessant. The more railroads that served a particular point the keener the struggle between rival traffic officials for business. For many years previous to 1900, and by many roads until 1906, rebates were paid to secure business to such an extent that officials have frankly admitted in evidence in proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission that few carriers pretended to collect more than 80 per cent of the advertised rates on shipments from competitive points. Railroads were built from business centers to business centers. Some reached the objective points by short direct routes, and others by long indirect routes. The latter, in order to do business at the competitive point, met the rates named by the short line, meanwhile maintaining higher rates at shorter distance points on their own lines. In the same way competition by boats on our inland and coastwise waterways was met by all-rail carriers until transportation by water, so far as our inland rivers are concerned, has been nearly abandoned. Cities and towns along these rivers entitled to enjoy the cheaper water transportation were deprived of the advantage of their location.

"The inducement to give the large shipper and all shippers from manufacturing centers an adequate supply of cars, transit privileges, switching arrangements, etc., was ever present, and the force of competition operated in favor of such shippers.

"These considerations rendered it impossible for the factory at the small town to compete in the sale of its product with a factory producing the same product at the larger and more favored city. The result was that the factory in the small town ceased to operate, and its employees were compelled to seek employment in the centers of production.

"While the payment of rebates that found their way into carriers' accounts ceased on the passage of the amendment to the act to regulate commerce of 1906, and many carriers had ceased to make such payments previously, the matter of preferential rates and the furnishing of superior facilities to competitive centers continued with unabated vigor until the taking over of the railroads by the President on December 28, 1917. That event was intended to bring about a complete change. Railroad managers were at first reluctant and in fact some have not yet fully accepted the fact that each road is no longer a competitor of the other, but all are engaged under Federal control as a great unified system in the business of transporting the necessities of war and the commerce of the country. The change was as startling as sudden. Preconceived notions of the rights of each carrier as against the other, and their relation to the public, were changed overnight.

"It seems to be conceded by everyone that no matter what is done with respect to the great transportation systems of the country after the war is over, that certain condemned practices, and the unbridled competition of past years is at end, and that by some means the carriers of the future will be under such regulations as will insure the largest and most effective use of the facilities they have for the conduct of the transportation business of the land without favor to one shipper or prejudice to another.

"The most important matter just now, however, is the part that the railroads should play in the readjustment that must be made in our industrial and economic conditions. As before noted, it has come about that the large part of our manufacturing is done in our cities. The greatest manufacturing cities of the Nation, considering the variety and quantity of production, are Chicago, Ill., and Philadelphia, Pa. Southern New England has developed into a succession of manufacturing cities. Pittsburgh dominates the iron and steel industry and controls prices wherever sales may be made in this country, as Chicago dominates and controls the prices of meats and their products. New York City produces immense quantities of ready-made clothing, employing thousands in sweatshops of unsavory surroundings. The result is that workmen and women in largest numbers live under conditions that are not sanitary, wholesome, nor conducive to good morals. This has happened in a country that is less densely populated than any of the great nations of earth, and where there is room enough for every citizen and resident to enjoy his full share of pure air and sunlight, and to live under conditions conducive to health, morality, and happiness. It would also enable him to secure a home at moderate cost, or at reasonable rental, with an area of ground sufficient to permit him to cultivate a garden where fresh vegetables may be grown for his own use.

"Many good people have organized societies and have expended large sums of money in philanthropic efforts to induce immigrants and others to shun the haunts of their fellows in crowded cities and seek homes in the South and West where conditions are wholesome. In this they have met with a measure of success and thriving communities composed of different nationalities may be found scattered over the land. At the same time, however, our cities have continued to increase in population and living conditions there have not improved as a consequence.

"There are many considerations that dictate a relocation of our manufacturing industries. In the first place, it costs more to do business in a city than in the country. Land values and costs of construction of plants, taxes, etc., constitute charges that must be met from earnings. It costs more to live in a city than in the country. A lower wage payment in the country than in the city would enable the workman to secure more comforts of life, to clothe his family better, and educate them more adequately. If the factory is located near the raw product, there is saving in transportation costs which will be reflected in net earnings.

"An economic change has been taking place in this country, particularly during the last decade, the importance of which is not generally realized. Consumers seem to be making the effort, so far as possible, to eliminate the middle man. The notion seems to be growing that there is no necessity to pay the charges of middle men to handle goods on their way from the factory to the ultimate consumer. The desire upon the part of the consumer to secure his needed articles as cheaply as possible is responsible for the great mail-order houses of the country that are doing a large and increasing business. It was testified in a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission that one mail-order house shipped from its main plant an average of 167 carloads of less-than-carload freight every day during the year 1915. Here, again, the public is demonstrating its desire to secure manufactured products from first-hand sources.

"Low freight rates have been initiated and maintained for years from producing centers to important junction and jobbing cities and towns. To towns beyond higher rates, both actually and relatively, have been maintained. Through rates from factories or great producing territories to towns beyond the jobbing centers are made up of a combination of the rates to such centers and those beyond. The result is, in many instances, to deprive the country point of just rates. The following table gives comparisons of through rates on certain articles in carloads and less than carloads now in effect to Cincinnati, Ohio; Williamsburg, Ky.; Chicago, Ill.; Omaha, Nebr.; Kansas City, Mo.; Alliance, Nebr.; and Dodge City, Kans., from New York, N. Y., together with distances as illustrative and representative of thousands of similar rate situations throughout the country, and showing the handicap under which the country towns are compelled to do business:

"It has been said, with a good deal of truth, that as a people we are profligate wasters. Our boundless resources, many of them still in a state of development, have led us to the belief that the springs from which flow our supplies are inexhaustible, and that the plentiful streams will flow on uninterruptedly forever. Is not this the time, has not the hour struck, that should arouse us to action that shall secure to us and our descendants the full measure of benefit that may come from nature's bounty spread round us on every hand?

"In very recent years there has been here and there a man whose vision has been broad enough to see what it is the consuming public demands and has attempted to meet it. One concern has in recent years, by cooperation with residents, induced the building by local capital of hundreds of flour mills at country points in the Middle West and South, which supply consumers in the region round about each mill with flour, meal, and feed. Another man owns in his own right many branch houses for distribution of groceries, merchandise, and general household necessities. He ships to the branch houses in carload lots and distributes to his customers in auto trucks. He is doing a large and thriving business. Both of these institutions are representative of a class that have recently come into existence.

"Does not the public demand which these institutions seek to meet point the way to a solution in part of the reconstruction problem that now confronts us? If wage scales are to be readjusted downward to meet conditions in times of peace, the wider diffusion of factories presents an alluring way out. What the workman desires, and what he has the right to demand, is opportunity to live in comfort. Reduction in the rate of his daily wage means, as he now sees it, lessened opportunity to secure to himself and his family those necessities which go to make comfort in daily life. In most any country town of 1,500 or more population that might be named in the Middle West or the South there is opportunity to live better and enjoy more of the real comforts of life, at materially lower wages, than even an approach to the same state of livelihood can be secured in any congested manufacturing center.

"The following table gives the number of towns, as shown by the census of 1910, under 5,000 population in the States named, where industries might be located and where every opportunity would be afforded employees to make the most of life under ideal conditions:

	Under 1,000.	1,000 to 2,000.	2,000 to 3,000.	3,000 to 5,000.
Illinois	3,800	179	79	43
Michigan	3,480	105	20	24
Wisconsin	2,480	70	21	25
Iowa	2,070	92	35	8
Nebraska	1,510	53	17	21
Kansas	2,190	67	25	25
Missouri	4,259	91	36	14
Kentucky	5,290	52	14	10
Virginia	5,160	41	13	12
West Virginia	3,803	44	18	9

"In the country there is pure air and sunlight. The surroundings are clean, sanitary, and moral. In such an atmosphere a workman can easily rear a family of sturdy boys and girls, and live a life of peace and happiness impossible for him to live in the crowded and unwholesome conditions of congested centers. In the country he is afforded opportunity to buy products of the soil first-hand for his table at reasonable prices, and the admirable schools and religious institutions now in existence everywhere insure to his children every chance to lay the foundation of good citizenship.

"Prior to about the year 1880 our inland waterways had an important part in transporting the commerce of the Nation. Within a decade from 1880 many boat lines disappeared from all rivers, and to-day only an insignificant percentage of freight tonnage is transported by water anywhere in the country. The best lines were either absorbed by railroads and their operations abandoned, or carriers made rates for freight so low to competitive boat-line points as to make the business unprofitable to the boat line. Spasmodic efforts to rehabilitate water transportation have been made from time to time in recent years by individuals or communities, but they have not met with success because of continued opposition of railroad interests. There never has been any good reason, and there is none now, why our rivers, on which the Federal Government has expended millions of dollars of the public money, should not be brought into transportation service.

"The National Shipping Board is rapidly building up our merchant marine on such a scale as to call for the admiration of all maritime nations. A portion of the energy of this admirable agency will doubtless be intensified, as it should be, in the building of steamboats and barges to move across the waters of our inland streams and lakes, as well as the bays and oceans of our coast line.

"Thoughtful study should now be given to the equalization of rates for freight transportation, and as to whether higher rates should for the future be permitted for shorter than for longer distances over the same line or route, the shorter being included within the longer distance, and whether combinations of rates and transit privileges that now unduly favor certain jobbing and junction points should be canceled and reasonable through rates established to all points. Transportation by boat on our rivers and coast lines should be encouraged to relieve rail carriers at congested cities and ports. Steps have already been taken under Federal control to divert traffic from congested North Atlantic ports to those of the South and on the Gulf of Mexico. Rates should be made and facilities provided so that each port of the United States, from Galveston, Tex., to Bangor, Me., shall receive its share of traffic under the most economical transportation conditions. Relatively the same facilities should be furnished the factory that ships 1 carload a day as the one that ships 10 or more carloads. The opportunity to do a manufacturing business at a profit should be afforded at any point in the country. The supply of raw material and the possible field of consumption will dictate the location.

"There are other matters which may be necessary to consider in connection with the possible reconstruction here indicated. One of them is the opportunity for financial support to industrial enterprises. In the past many factories have been located in already congested districts at the behest of those who furnished the financial backing. In this way high-priced land was disposed of and costly buildings erected, which enhanced the value of vacant adjacent lands. Interlocking directors of banks, railroads, and factories have doubtless influenced the formation and perpetuation of conditions that have prevailed and to some extent yet prevail. This matter is now largely behind us and should present no insuperable barrier in the future to the wider distribution of manufacturing establishments.

"A new era is at hand. The carriers of the country for the future are to serve the public interests. The dictates of selfishness and private greed that have for so long a time controlled the policy and management of our great transportation systems no longer constitute the guide for action. In a time like this, when readjustment of industrial and economic conditions is imperative, the railroads must do their part to the end that there may be decided progress on the highway that leads to equality of opportunity for all and to ultimate national greatness and individual contentment."

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to say that nowhere in the article has Mr. McChord attempted to discuss the relative necessity of the Government's continuing the ownership and control of railroads, nor has he attempted to compare the results except to the extent of what might be accomplished one way and what might be accomplished the other way. It is an article dealing particularly with certain conditions that must be remedied after the war is over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is no fixed rule as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests, but it has been the practice not to print both in the RECORD and as a public document. There is no rule of the Senate, nor rule adopted by either House.

Mr. SMOOT. I said it was the rule of the committee, not of the Senate or of the House. I know that to be the fact.

Mr. FLETCHER. The object, I think, is accomplished by having the article printed in the RECORD, but of course if it could be printed as a Senate document, that would give it wider circulation. I think it is an article which deserves circulation. I have seen a copy of it, and it is a very timely and a very able discussion of the whole subject. The commissioner deals with the centralization of manufacturing plants in big cities and reaches out largely to rebates in favor of through carriers which most of us have suspected to be the case, but we have not been able to point it out as strongly and as clearly and with such force as the Commissioner of the Interstate Commerce Commission does.

Of course, when the amendment of the interstate commerce act of 1906 was passed prohibiting rebates we rather expected this sort of favoritism would be discontinued, but the transportation companies claim to have gotten around it by an arrangement among themselves by making special rates for improving some little facilities, and that sort of thing. The point that it is desired to make is that this matter is of very great importance to the whole country, and whatever may come of the Government operation of the railroads, certainly it is in the power now of one man or of one agency to prevent what has been going on growing out of competition in transportation lines.

Another great thing that I think can be accomplished is the coordination of railway lines with waterway routes. One of the things which the commissioner points out in this article is that the abandonment of water transportation has been due to the fierce competition of railroads for business. There is an opportunity here to reopen many of the waterways which have not been actively used as they should have been, to utilize these facilities for transportation in connection with the railway lines, so as to develop both to the fullest capacity and for the benefit of the whole country. The fact is that the railway lines have in many instances, perhaps not altogether as a fixed policy, had effect to discourage and crush out water competition, so that a good many of the shippers of the country have not been even advised as to any particular way they should use the water routes.

Since some reference has been made to individual experience here, I can indicate an experience of my own, if you will allow me. Last summer I ordered an article from New York, a refrigerator, and I sent my check in payment of it. Week after week went by and I heard nothing of the refrigerator. Finally they told me it had been shipped, but had been lost. I waited a while longer and they could not find it. Then they informed me that they could not get it shipped; that they could not get the railroad companies to take it; and asked me if I would not take it up with the people here in Washington by some means to work out a plan whereby that refrigerator could come from New York to Washington. Then I wrote back and I said, "Why bother with the railroads? Why do you not ship it to Norfolk and from Norfolk to Washington by water, or ship it to Baltimore by water and let it come here from Baltimore by rail?" The reply was, "We had not thought of that at all, but we have arranged so that the refrigerator goes forward immediately to Baltimore by water and then by rail to Washington."

This merely illustrates that the shippers of the country have never fully realized the advantages which the water routes offer, and that has been due very largely, I think, to the fact that they have gotten into the habit of using the railroads, and because of some conveniences, and they have not been encouraged to use the waterways. This article points out the way by which the inland waterways and the other waterways of the country can be utilized in connection with the railroads so as to solve this great transportation problem. I think it is a most important document, a most timely one, and it will be of great value.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I quite agree with the remarks of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] concerning the particular article and the wide publicity which should be given to it. Mr. McChord has presented, in my opinion, in an interesting and an illuminating fashion a subject matter that we who have been dealing with railroad questions in the past have often had to meet, and deals with it in such fashion, whether in accord with our views or not, that I am very glad, indeed, that the article adverted to by the Senator from Nevada has been placed in the RECORD.

I congratulate the Senator from Nevada as well upon his opening remarks in touching the subject which will be of transcendent importance to us in the days to come. It is obvious to all of us that we must now devote our best thought to what will be done when peace shall have been declared and when the millions in the military service of the Nation shall return to our land.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, recently has presented a remarkable and, in my opinion, a most intelligent and worthy and valuable treatise as to his views in this regard and in respect to the service under his jurisdiction, and what might be accomplished by that service. I agree with him wholly; but I go yet further. It seems to me it is essential when the war shall have been concluded and our boys shall have returned that not alone may they be placed upon the public lands of the United States, which will be insufficient for the success of a real agrarian policy, but that arrangements shall be made as well that they may engage in agricultural pursuits by the consummation of a land-colonization plan similar in character to that which has been successfully carried out in Australia and is now being successfully tried in California.

This is no new, no empirical scheme. In Victoria, in Australia, it has been successfully put in operation, and there a vast territory has been settled by men who are a credit to the colony.

In the State from which I come the experiment is now being tried of the same sort of land colonization under the guidance of the State itself and under the management of the same man who wrought such wonders in Victoria, Dr. Elwood Mead.

When these boys return it is our desire that they shall not go into the congested quarters of the great cities but that they shall go upon the great waste lands of the Nation, and the Nation can well afford to provide those lands and see that they come to those who desire them upon such terms that the Nation shall not lose and that those who go upon them may have the opportunity to work out their salvation and ultimately to pay for them.

This is exactly what we are doing in California, exactly what the Nation must do, and it is my purpose within a very brief period to present concretely a plan founded upon what is now in operation in the State of California, a land-colonization plan by which we may take care of these soldiers when suddenly millions are returned to civil life. When that plan is presented I trust that we may have the assistance and the very valuable aid of the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Nevada.

One other thing has been adverted to here, and that is the railroad situation. I voted for the railroad bill because I favor Government ownership of public utilities. I voted for the telegraph and the telephone bill, not upon any specious plea made here upon this floor, not upon any disingenuous utterance that the power should be conferred because it never would be exercised. I voted for it upon the fundamental idea that I would have the Government own every public utility that has a monopoly of that in which the public deals and must deal.

I decline, Mr. President, to measure the principle of Government ownership by the present management of railroads of the United States, and I will not have this governmental principle, dear, perhaps, to very few of us in this Chamber but to very many beyond these walls, determined by a few months of the present railroad management.

At the time control of the railroads was taken in December last, in a public statement I said that the success or the ill-success of those then taking over the railroads, the efficient management or lack of efficient management by them, might determine for a generation whether or not we would have Government ownership. That may be so now, Mr. President, but whether so or not, what has transpired in the past few months in regard to the Government control of railroads should not be taken as the measure of efficiency in Government ownership, or as a real test of Government ownership. If Government ownership can withstand the present management, its future is not in doubt.

Now, one other thing while I am on my feet. Recently a resolution was passed asking information as to our wretched mail facilities in France. To that resolution there was reply made by the Postmaster General, in which he says that when it is stated that the mail facilities in France with our boys are wretched the statement is without foundation in fact. In this statement the Postmaster General is absolutely in error. I speak from personal experience with at least one soldier in France, and I say to you that that soldier in one month did not receive a single letter from his people, although he was written to at least four times a week during that entire period. Finally he cabled, in distress, to know what had happened to his family. The letters which pass between us are numbered. He received one in six of mine. I received one in four of his. That has been the situation since March last in the transmission of our mail.

I call your attention, Mr. President, to the remarks of Mr. Otto Kahn, who has just returned from the front, and who says that one of the things which militates most against the morale of our boys in France is the fact that they can not get their mail; they can not hear from loved ones at home.

I recognize that there may be difficulties in transportation of mail at a time when the lads are out on the march, or are engaged in battle, and that often they may not be accessible, but yet there are district Government post offices in France regularly numbered now, and there can not be, so far as I can grasp, any legitimate reason why mail should not go to those particular and distinct governmental post offices. When a boy over there, 3,000 miles away under a different régime and a different government, under strange circumstances, daily facing danger and death, can receive no word from home, depression follows, of course, and morale is affected, and there is no reason thus far presented by officials or others why this should be so.

In conclusion, now, I wish to congratulate the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] upon introducing the very important subject of what ultimately we shall do after the war is over. The old Republic, Mr. President, will never be the same. The old Nation we have known, the day of care-free individualism, is past. God only knows what it has in store for the American people. But there is no higher duty, no greater statesmanship that can be displayed by this body, than providing for that day when the strain shall be upon us, when we can see the Republic only in a new and strange era, holding for us but the mysteries of the future.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am going to address myself to a subject for a short time, and an apology perhaps is due for my doing so, because it is a matter which has apparently passed from the consideration of this body, so far as legislation is concerned. But I hope to justify further discussion as I proceed with the facts.

Upon the 25th day of February, 1907, the Congress of the United States passed an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance." Sections 2 and 3 of that act provided—

That this corporation shall be perpetual and have all the privileges accorded by existing laws or that may hereafter be enacted by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 3. That this corporation, composed of the individuals aforesaid and their associates, under the name and style aforesaid, is formed for the purposes as follows: The conservation of the principles of representative government and the protection and maintenance of all civil and political rights, the protection of German immigrants against imposition and deception and to assist in their naturalization; the study of American institutions and the publication of American history; the cultivation of the German language, literature, and drama, and the perpetuation of the memory and deeds of those early German pioneers whose influence has been of incalculable benefit to the intellectual and economic development of this country and whose loyalty in times of stress and strife is a matter of history.

It will be observed that the object and purposes as set forth in this charter were most commendable, and had its purposes been carried out, those operating under the charter would have been entitled to the commendation of the American people. Suffice it to say that almost everything that it was agreed should be done under the charter were the things they did not do, and the reverse was what they undertook to do.

Upon the 16th day of January, 1918, the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] introduced a bill to repeal this charter. It provides:

That the act approved February 25, 1907, entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

A hearing was had under the bill, and a very extensive hearing. The hearings are incorporated in a volume of some 600 or 700 pages. Since the report of the committee the bill has been passed by both Houses of Congress and, I am informed, it has been signed by the President. If not, I presume it will be signed shortly.

Thus, Mr. President, we have disposed of the simple, but important, proposition of canceling the charter. But the facts revealed by these hearings and the condition unmistakably disclosed warn us that something more than the mere canceling of the charter is desirable. The charter was deemed a convenience, perhaps something of a shield, to those who would carry forward the work of undermining the solidarity of our social and political life. But it was and is by no means indispensable to such work. The work can go forward just as well without as with the charter. In the end, perhaps, the work can go on better without it than with it, for the charter was bound to direct attention, and doubtless in due time it would have been voluntarily surrendered. To cancel the charter, therefore, and then to compose our minds relative to this matter is to film over the cancer while inwardly it eats its way to the seat of national life.

The problem is a far more difficult one and requires more earnest and thorough treatment than the unanimous disposal of the charter. In its broadest aspect it presents the whole question of the power we are to enjoy as a nation and the peace we are to enjoy as a people. It is nothing less than the entire question of the perpetuity of our institutions. It presents not the simple question of loyalty in time of war, and in protecting the country from enemies within in times of national stress, but, what is equally vital and fundamental, it presents the question of unity, of virility and efficiency in time of peace. If there is to be carried on in our midst a propaganda against our whole theory and system of government and we are to seek in no wise to counteract it and stamp it out, if those who come here are not to become thoroughly and conscientiously Americans, then it is only a question of time until we shall find our institutions giving way to those insidious changes and our Government yielding to those subtle forces which are often more destructive than the attack of an open foe. It is time to take stock, formulate a national policy, to announce a national program with reference to all those who seek happiness and prosperity in this country. It is time to show our own faith and our loyalty to our own institutions by thoroughly acquainting those who come here with our system of government. It should be known beyond peradventure that Americanism is to Americans a distinct and vital principle, an elemental force—a thing which we will neither carelessly forfeit nor knowingly surrender.

This country, Mr. President, is dedicated to a particular scheme of government and a particular brand of civilization.

Those who come here as well as those who are born here are under every obligation, both moral and legal, to acquaint themselves with the high purposes of that dedication and to uphold its aims and purposes. It would be unfair to those who have come under the sinister influence of the active spirits operating under this charter to permit them to suppose that having canceled the charter that is the end of this matter. They should be informed unmistakably that no one can be a true citizen of this Republic who simply refrains from doing wrong or refrains from taking active oppositon to the Government. The obligation is much greater than that. To refrain from wrongdoing or active opposition is not sufficient. There must be active, vigilant devotion such as characterizes men who love the country in which they live.

From reading this testimony I formed one very satisfactory conclusion, and that is that the vast majority of German people, if they are protected from scheming propagandists, would become thoroughly American and ally themselves conscientiously with the great cause of representative government. That is one of the pleasing features disclosed by this investigation. In fact, I think it quite apparent that the great object which the movers had in view was to check the manifest tendency or disposition of the German-Americans to become thoroughly American, and to identify themselves with American life, to disavow and disown all other obligations than that which they assumed toward our Government. My remarks to-day, therefore, in so far as they take the form of strictures or criticism might well be confined to a small per cent who were most active and who really dominated these organizations. They conjured up such vain issues as "nativistic encroachment," and in different ways sought to arouse the passions and prejudices and stir the racial feelings of the German citizen, and in this way carried on the work. But I repeat that they had much difficulty, as is apparent from the hearings, in staying the German people from accepting completely the principles of the American Government and identifying themselves entirely with American life.

I first call attention to some statements from the hearings. I shall not be able, of course, to go fully into the matter, but enough will be put in the RECORD to disclose the nature of the propaganda which was going on under the direction of the charter, which really obligated them to the very reverse of the action which they took.

This propaganda taught first that the German-American owed a higher allegiance than that which he owed to the Government of the United States. There is disseminated all through these hearings the doctrine not only of a double allegiance to which I shall refer later, but of a higher allegiance and obligation than that which the citizen coming to this country and taking the oath owes to this Government. With boldness and persistency they placed the first duty, in case of conflict, to the German Empire and with great ability and subtlety urged its superior worth.

In its official bulletin, volume 7, No. 9, page 4, put out in September, 1915, this statement is found:

> The National Alliance leads the battle against Anglo-Saxonism, against the fanatical slaves of political and personal liberty.

A man formerly a Member of the American Congress advised the Germans upon a public occasion in a public speech that they should forget all parties and vote only for those who would advance the cause of Germanism and German kultur in America.

Mr. President, a remarkable thing about that is that so indifferent have we been to the situation, so disregardful of what was going on in our very midst, that this man could stand under the protection of the American flag and claim the privileges and opportunities of the American Republic, and advise upon a public occasion, at a time when we were on the verge of a great war, that the highest duty which a vast number of people of this country owed to any one power was that which they owed to a foreign Government.

A people so thoughtless and regardless of the question of unity and solidarity in national life as we disclosed ourselves to be by tolerating conditions such as these will in due time pay the penalty. Fortunately for us, the awakening came before the influences at work were able to bring about such a condition as existed in Italy and Russia, where most gigantic forces antagonistic to the home government had been built up in the same way and through similar agencies. But we have our warning now, and if we are true and vigilant we shall greatly benefit by the knowledge.

Prof. Kuehnemann, in an address under the auspices of the alliance in December, 1915, said:

> German-America is a German cultural colony to which, however, the mother country has, up to the present time, not given sufficient attention, because the mother country has in the meantime been in the process of a development of its own; but these days are now past. Germany is no longer a continental world power. In place of her officials will come the German race, and a new German world is in process of creation. With their old customs the Germans came to this country and have lived in their old customs up until the present day; but the new German spirit will inspire them anew. It is necessary that the spirit of the new German state work be transplanted by the German-Americans to this their adopted country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that Prof. Kuehnemann was brought here largely by the National German-American Alliance to carry on this propaganda. He made speeches in various parts of the United States under their auspices, and they indorsed his utterances and utilized him in every possible way to carry on the propaganda which they had inaugurated so many years before.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator for his statement. In its official bulletin, volume 12, these words are found:

> The inevitable ultimate victory of Germany will find the Germans the world over a united race of brothers.

In the same official bulletin it is said:

> We are proud to call ourselves citizens of this Republic, but we are still prouder to be German-Americans. The hyphen is for us an honor, and we carry it as a distinction. And we at once make the confession that we preserve the ideals which we took from our old home as sacred and that we are actively engaged in realizing those ideals to the best of our strength for the welfare of our fatherland.

In a book written by Herman Oncken, a German historian, and indorsed by the alliance are found these words:

> We should clearly understand that yonder German-Americanism is a part of our national body. We should learn the great lesson that the German nation extends beyond and will extend beyond the German State in which we live.

In a book entitled "The Greater Germany," published in Germany in 1915 and circulated by the alliance, these words are found:

> The report often brought against the German-American that as soon as he goes to America he becomes a citizen is unjustified, for if the German who intends to remain there does not become a citizen he has no vote at the election, no influence of any kind on the conduct of the Nation's political affairs. He must become an American. He is permitted, however, and can and ought in heart, thought, nature, and act to remain a German.

The duplicity, the audacity, the boldness of the Hohenzollern dynasty is concentrated and crystallized in that infamous statement. You can take your oath of allegiance, enter into a solemn contract, and pass among your fellow citizens as a citizen of this Republic and still carry in your heart treachery to the institution which you have taken your oath to support. Such a position as is here stated and in which these propagandists would place the German-American citizen is an unnatural and immoral one, and the ordinary German-American would never assume it if permitted to choose his own course, hence the necessity of such activities as those of the alliance. It takes careful nurturing to implant in the human heart the devilish creed of an "Iago."

Now, Mr. President, there is another feature disclosed by the hearings. One of the great objects of this propaganda was to organize the German people into a distinct organization for political purposes, to make them effective as a political force, separate and apart from the general political affairs of the Government—in other words, to have them represent as a political organization not any distinct issue arising in American life, but whatever issue might arise which was of concern to the German people particularly or to the German Government. The design was to create a political "group" inspired by the principles of German kultur operating in American politics. And this explains why this movement has been permitted to go on; it had political power.

I shall read but a few excerpts out of a multitude which might be quoted.

From the bulletin about September, 1917:

> Only in vigorous unity does the welfare of American Germanism rest. Every division of our power is a betrayal of the cause of German kultur.

From a bulletin about September, 1917:

> For the first time gigantic strides which the National German-American Alliance has made in the few years of its existence, and the fact that it has united within itself no fewer than 2,000,000 votes, have given to German-Americanism in actuality a political significance in spite of the fact that the alliance as such has no politics.

In a bulletin put out in December, 1911, this statement is found:

> The National German-American Alliance aims to awaken and strengthen the sense of unity among the German people of America to check nativistic encroachments.

President Hexamer in his several speeches urges German unity, the patronizing alone of the German press, the ultimate establishment of German kultur throughout the United States, and encourages political activity as to units to bring about these results.

In the official bulletin, volume 7, No. 9, page 15, this statement is found:

In German circles in Pennsylvania not only are German ideals and customs faithfully maintained which have contributed so much to the ethical development of a nation, but through united cooperation under the aegis of the German-American Alliance our German-American citizens have become a political factor with which the ruling political powers must deal.

In the official bulletin of April, 1916, these words are found:

In these hours that are so dark for Germanism we must use our votes to the best of our ability; we must, without regard to previous intimations and desires, vote only for those who are the friends of Germanism.

In the official bulletin of April, 1916, are to be found instructions to be sent out to all the alliances throughout the entire country to oppose any candidate for President who was unfriendly to the Germans—not, if you please, that he was disqualified in any way from serving the American Government or incapacitated from leading the American Republic in time of peril, but because he was unfriendly to the Germans. Perhaps no more startling proposition was ever put forth in any country under such circumstances, and certainly no people were ever so leniently dealt with as those few representatives of the Hohenzollern dynasty in this country who are the authors of such a movement. What could be more menacing, more deserving of condemnation, than to undertake to elect a President of this country because of his known friendliness to a foreign power?

But, Mr. President, perhaps the most subtle and, if successful, the most dangerous feature of this propaganda was that in which they undertook to show that there was such a thing as a double allegiance and that one could be a citizen of this Republic and at the same time serve with entire consistency and to the fullest extent of his capacity the German Government. In order to make such a proposition acceptable to an honest or sane mind and in order to reach the mass of the German citizens it was necessary to inculcate the doctrine that there was nothing inconsistent in the two theories of government, that one could be true to both without being false to the principles of either—in other words, that the principles of the German Government and the principles of this Government were reconcilable and in fundamental principles in harmony. Let us, for the sake of those who have listened to such teachings and who may some time have entertained them, examine briefly this proposition.

Frederick William IV, in a speech from the throne in 1847, at a most critical period of the Government, said, "All written constitutions are only scraps of paper." No other or further statement than this need be had to convince all thinking men that the principles upon which the two governments rest are irreconcilable and forever antagonistic. A written constitution of stated, definite, and rigid terms, save only as modified or changed in the orderly method pointed out by the instrument itself, binding alike upon the private citizen and the public servant, is indispensable to our plan of government. Without the fundamental law established and originated by the people defining the powers of government and guaranteeing the rights and liberties of the people our system would fall and disappear utterly. The right of the people to their own charter of government and to have it observed and obeyed by all is something the Hohenzollern can not understand. The right of some individual by supposed divine authority to command and direct the destinies of a whole nation is something we can understand but will not tolerate. No man can serve both these masters, and no man can plead ignorance as a justification for his attempting to do so.

Unfortunately for us and greatly to the aid of those who support this pernicious doctrine, we ourselves are given to the use of loose and vicious statements regarding our Constitution. We exhibit sometimes a strong disposition to accept a leaf from the Prussian bible. Our words and our acts are not always in harmony with our creed. Every man who takes the law in his own hands or would deprive his fellow countrymen of their rights or liberties under the Constitution is an apostle of Prussianism. Every public officer who knowingly disregards the people's law which he has taken an oath to support is a eulogist of William IV and a defender of his faith. Though short-sighted and selfish and ignorant, and for those reasons entitled to pity, he is still the enemy of free institutions. Every man who defends the doctrine that the Constitution can be changed or any of its provisions disregarded or amended save through the method prescribed by the people, and by the people themselves, is consciously or unconsciously joined to the hosts who war with democracy. Law and obedience to law are virtues without which a democracy can not exist. So I do not care what their good intentions may be or what plausible purposes they have in view, those who teach by word or act, here or elsewhere, that constitutions are scraps of paper are servants of that dark creed which is now engulfing the world in war.

There will be many things which we as a people will need when the war is over. Among the most vital things will be an old-time revival of faith in constitutional government. We will need to examine anew some first principles, to get back to the teachings which made us great and made us strong and which alone will keep us great and strong. There is one thing, and only one, which will keep the virus of lawlessness and force of personal government out of the veins of our national life, and that is an aroused, determined, and vigilant public opinion, a people ever alert with a deep and abiding faith in the efficiency and strength and ultimate success of free institutions.

Let us follow these statements a little further. William II, in a speech October 18, 1894, declared: "The only pillar on which the realm rested was the army. So it is to-day." This follows logically and inevitably from the former statement that written constitutions are scraps of paper. With no charter for a guide, with all law reduced to personal discretion, with courts controlled or destroyed, the sole pillar of the State is force represented by the army. If a man is not for constitutional government, for courts openly administering the law and dispensing justice under the Constitution, then he is for military tribunals as the sole source of justice. Can any such conflicting theories ever be reconciled? Can a man be for one without being against the other? Certainly not; and no one should allow himself to be misled and misdirected by such a delusion. If you believe in the German system and can not get rid of that belief, you can never be a true citizen of the Republic and you will live the life of a perjurer every day you try it. Sooner or later you will realize it to your undoing. It is every man's duty, whether native or foreign born, his duty to himself, the happiness of his family, and to the well-being of all, to bring himself in complete understanding and harmony with the fundamental principles of our Government and to live up to them in candor and manly devotion. Those in the alliance who taught that the German-born citizen could be a good citizen of this Republic and remain true to the German Government were doing a great wrong to our country, but they were also dealing in deceit and dishonesty and treachery with those whom they sought to instruct.

I now quote from one who was long an instructor in an American institution of learning—a man of great learning, a student of this and the German Government. He was candid in his statement of the irreconcilable conflict between the two systems which are now in deadly conflict on the battle fields of Europe. I quote from Prof. Munsterberg:

They think an emperor is a kind of president, with large constitutional powers, chosen for a lifetime. He is not; and as long as the German nation believes in those ideals which have given to German culture its characteristic meaning in the world, there is no room for a president, whether he be selected for a year or for a lifetime.

The idea of a president is that he draws his power from the will of the millions of individuals. The democracy believes that the State exists for the individuals, and that the individuals, therefore, are above the State. The idea of an emperor is that he is the symbol of the State as a whole, independent from the will of the individuals, and therefore independent of any elections; the bearer of the historic tradition—above the struggle of single men.

For the German, the State is not for the individuals, but the individuals for the State. It is the same contrast which gives to every realm of German civilization its deepest meaning. The American view is that science and art and law, like the State, exist for the good of the individual persons; their value is to serve them (the people). The Germans believe that science and art and law and state are valuable in themselves, and that the highest glory of the individual is to serve those eternal values.

Yes; serve the same arbitrary will, the same caprice and ambition as when he served the anointed king, though now the master stands clothed in the name and form of the "State." The individual remains, however, a mere cog in a machine, as remorseless and more ambitious than a Cæsar or a Louis, for "the very scope of the German idea can afford no smaller sphere than the world itself." The people are deprived of will or discretion, robbed of all initiative, and doomed to remain as they have always been under such circumstances—beasts of burden.

A few days ago I read in a responsible publication this paragraph attributed to Ludendorf, now the masterful genius directing the forces of the enemy:

War is not any more a warring of armies, but a struggle of nation against nation. All the means used to weaken an enemy nation become legitimate. By killing women and children, for example, one destroys the future mothers and eventual defenders of the country.

I hesitate to attribute this statement to any living man. It seems incredible and yet it is written in letters of blood over the face of Belgium. It is verified in the tragedy of Serbia. It is in harmony with the whole frightful creed that might makes right. And who will undertake to reconcile these principles with the teachings of Washington or the faith of that tragic figure who covered with the mantle of charity and love all the passions and hate of internecine war? Who could hold allegiance for a single hour to a government which discredits and denounces written constitution, which relies upon force and the army for its sole basis of power, and which initiates through its leading men such principles as those to which I have referred? There is no power that can reconcile the two political creeds. They can not live in the same human heart or find entertainment in one mind.

But, Mr. President, let us turn from this doctrine to the true doctrine and the true creed for the German-American coming to this country. Fortunately, we have many illustrious examples and the spoken words of one of the most distinguished of German-American citizens. Let us turn from this deceit and double-dealing and treachery which has been taught under the auspices of these alliances to the clear, open, manly maxims announced by one of the great figures among those who came from Germany to make their home in this country. I quote from a speech of this distinguished man delivered in Faneuil Hall, "the cradle of American liberty," April 18, 1859:

I, born in a foreign land, pay my tribute to Americanism? Yes; for to me the word "Americanism," true Americanism, comprehends the noblest ideas which ever swelled a human heart with noble pride.

Speaking of his boyhood days, he said:

I looked up from my schoolbooks into the stir and bustle of the world, and the trumpet tones of struggling humanity struck my ear and thrilled my heart, and I saw my nation shake her chains in order to burst them, and I heard a gigantic, universal shout for liberty rising up to the skies; and at last, after having struggled manfully and drenched the earth of Fatherland with the blood of thousands of noble beings, I saw that nation crushed down again, not only by overwhelming armies, but by the dead weight of customs and institutions and notions and prejudices which past centuries had heaped upon them, and which a moment of enthusiasm, however sublime, could not destroy; then I consoled an almost despondent heart with the idea of a youthful people and of original institutions clearing the way of an untrammeled development of the ideal nature of man. Then I turned my eyes instinctively across the Atlantic Ocean, and America and Americanism, as I fancied them, appeared to me as the last depositories of the hopes of all true friends of humanity.

Further on, in the same speech:

In the colony of free humanity, whose mother country is the world, they establish the republic of equal rights, where the title of manhood is the title to citizenship. My friends, if I had a thousand tongues and a voice strong as the thunder of heaven, they would not be sufficient to impress upon your minds forcibly enough the greatness of this idea, the overshadowing glory of this result. This was the dream of the truest friends of man from the beginning; for this the noblest blood of martyrs has been shed; for this has mankind waded through seas of blood and tears. There it is now; there it stands, the noble fabric in all the splendor of reality.

Yes, Mr. President, as this distinguished German-born citizen says, here it is, here it stands in all its nobility and grandeur, and the men or class of men who teach the German citizen coming to this country or the German immigrant that it is possible to be loyal to this noble structure reared by the blood and sacrifices of noble men and at the same time loyal to those principles with which our whole theory is at war are just as much the enemies of this country as those men who are shooting their bullets into our boys on the battle front in France.

It is time, Mr. President, that this be understood. Let there never again be any doubt in the minds of those who come here that we welcome those who come with a purpose to strive for the success of these institutions and shall treat as enemies those who do not. There can be no double allegiance here—it is the fabrication of traitors.

Sir, if you want to bestow a high praise upon a man, you are apt to say he is an old Roman. But I know a higher epithet of praise; it is, He is a true American!

Upon another occasion he made this statement, addressed particularly to those who had taken the oath of allegiance to this Government. It contains all that need be said upon the subject. It is the whole law in regard to it. Any man who follows it will have no cause to regret his course. Any man who fails to follow it will likely have much cause in the future to regret his action:

As American citizens, having sworn allegiance to the United States, not one of them should ever forget that this Republic has a right to expect of all its adopted citizens as to their attitude toward public affairs, especially questions of peace or war, the loyal and complete subordination of the interests of their native country to the rights of the United States.

Carl Schurz was born in a little village on the banks of the Rhine of peasant ancestry. He grew up amid the inspiring scenes and moving traditions of the old Rhine country. A child of revolution, he caught the spirit of '48 and was a distinguished and eloquent advocate of a German republic. He had no aristocratic taint in his blood, no respect for kings in his mind. At last, forced to flee from Prussian frightfulness, risking his life to rescue a fellow revolutionist, he finally landed in America. He reached America in the stirring days of the debate on the slavery question, in which he at once took part. He gained great honors in his adopted country, and I cite his example and his words to all American citizens of German descent. If his example and his advice are accepted, this country will have no cause to complain and the German citizen will have no fault to find with the country which is his by adoption. I commend the further reading of his speeches and writings to all who would know the true principles of American citizenship and its high and solemn obligations.

Mr. President, this fearful war, with all its cruel and brutal story, has its compensations—some yet hidden, we would fain believe, but some already revealed. It has advised us in unmistakable terms of the disintegrating forces at work in our own Nation and among our own people. It has admonished the husbandman, as it were, of both the folly and the danger which threaten his estate. We are now conscious of the effect of this indifference of ours to national unity. We realize how improvident we have been in fostering the national spirit. Hitherto we have apparently regarded ourselves as exempt from the law of retrogression and annointed against the insidious forces of national decay. We have looked upon our heritage as some heir rioting in the luxury of his vast unearned and unprized estate. Inviting here the people of all nations, bidding them partake of our public lands and gather of our incalculable wealth, we have taken little care to make them acquainted with our system of government or to bring them under the influence of our own theory and conception of civilization. We have seemed to suppose that a nation could be made out of territory and material things alone, out of railroads and factories and farms, out of masters and servants, overlooking the deep, underlying, indispensable social and moral forces, without which all else is temporary and fleeting. That moral surrender to the Nation's aims and purposes, that conformity with and service to the Nation's ideals, that faith in our institutions and love for our flag, constituting the real basis of national power, have had too small a part in our program or vision during the busy years in which we have been taking possession of the continent.

It is not a question with us as a people where a man was born or where his ancestors were born. The question is, Does he come here to become a part of us, to identify himself with our life, to accept without reservation our standards of civilization, and to live in obedience to, and if need be to make the final sacrifice for, our institutions? Does America mean something to him separate and apart from all the world; has it an individuality which commands his admiration and evokes his allegiance? If he is not a part of us in spirit and purpose, he should not seek to be a part of us physically. If he does not feel the thrill of a new life as he comes in touch with the virile forces of the Western Hemisphere, if he is not happy to be free of the environments from which he has fled and to be a part of the new life with which he comes in contact, then he is a menace to our nationality and a hindrance to our best and highest aims. We can submit to many things from without; we can defend ourselves successfully against all foreign foes. But we can not long endure if those who come among us do not become thoroughly assimilated to our national being. It would mean decay from within. It would mean a feeble, disorganized, factional people, more to be dreaded than the enmity of all the despots of the earth. No man either English or Irish or German, no wanderer from any clime, no refugee from any land nursing his loyalty to home institutions, feeding sweet memories of other lands, yearning for the displacement of our concept of national life by that of some other can be a loyal citizen of this Republic.

Mr. President, neither nations nor men can live by bread alone. We are justly proud of our material wealth and the genius which its development has revealed. But if we are not united, not in mere form, not merely through constitutions and statutes but in spirit and purpose, it were better that we were not so rich in material resources, for these things but feed dissension when once the seeds are sown. We want no groups, no nations within a nation, no war of races, no conflict of nationalities, but a united, a homogeneous people, inspired by the same great principles of government and bending every energy and consecrating all powers to the accomplishment of the same great achievement—the triumph of representative government. It was a daring scheme, the scheme which the fathers initiated. It had never before succeeded. Some of the wisest political philosophers and statesmen yet doubt its ultimate success. If it is to succeed, it will require nothing less than the untiring purpose, the vigilant devotion, the never-ending zeal of a whole people. There can be no cross purposes, no conflicts, no factions in the performance of this task. Certainly those who come here can afford to strip themselves of all prejudices, predilections, and preconceived opinions, and everything which renders them less effective or less a part of us, and join us in the most stupendous undertaking ever assumed by any people. Let us be for America and in harmony and at peace with all the world if possible; if not, let us be for America as against the world. The prize for which we contend is a great one, but it is worth all the sacrifice, should we succeed, which its realization may cost in treasure and blood.

Sir, we should never again be indifferent to the subtle forces which mold and direct public opinion in this country. That power which under our form of government marks the rise and fall of parties and is, in the last analysis, the sole support of our laws, the supreme guaranty of every privilege and blessing we enjoy, should no longer be regarded with such short-sighted complacency as has characterized our attitude in the past. Upon it rests our whole vast fabric, and those who would undermine it or wrongfully direct it strike at the very life of our national being. If foreigners should come here and fraternize with our soldiers, infest with disloyal sentiments our sailors, urging that there was somewhere a wiser, more beneficent system of government, they would be dealt with, and properly so, as spies. What shall be said of those, especially the treatment of those who go back to the sources of all power, who pollute the very wellsprings of national being, who weaken and demoralize the faith and the courage of those who hold the reins of Government—the people—who seek, in other words, to control and direct public opinion against our institutions and our whole system of government? I repeat, we can no longer remain indifferent to this situation. And this applies not to one class but to all classes who come within the practice denounced.

A people whose public servants more and more show a marked tendency to yield all convictions and surrender all views to the popular demand, even to the passing, hastening moods of a day, and who at the same time more and more neglect the forces which mold public opinion are headed for irretrievable disaster. If public servants, as seems generally true of a Republic, are merely to register the decree of the people, then it behooves every true friend of the Republic to see that the people are vigilantly warned daily and hourly of the evil tendencies and antagonistic forces which sooner or later burrow about the pillars of free government. We must as a people go back to the wellsprings of national power and clean them out and keep them cleaned out. The sources of the stream of public opinion must be kept free from the polluting effect of disloyal teachings. Those who are not with us in this task are against us. It has been said of old that you can not serve God and Mammon. No less plainly is it written in our creed that you can not serve America and at the same time serve foreign governments or foreign policies antagonistic to the very principles upon which our whole system of government rests.

Mr. President, in a discouraging hour of the conflict between the States, at a time when our whole scheme of free government was wrapped in the flames of Civil War, Mr. Lincoln sadly asked, "Is there in all Republics this inherent and fatal weakness? Must a government of necessity be too strong for the liberties of its own people or too weak to maintain its own existence?" The inherent weakness, I venture to say, is not in the plan itself, it is rather in that inexplicable mystery of human history—the disposition of the citizen to go to sleep at his post. With a vigilant, frugal, sober, loyal people, ours is the most splendid conception in government yet devised by the wit of man. It gives to the citizen initiative and self-reliance; it breeds men, not slaves; it insures liberty and guarantees justice. Occupying that great temperate zone of man's intellectual explorations, resting securely between the extremes of absolutism, which oppresses and burdens its subjects, and the unlicensed liberty which intoxicates and devitalizes its devotees, free of the vices of either and the cruelty of both, geared through and through with order and law, expansive and spacious enough for the highest human progress, it is the most advanced and available contrivance for human freedom ever intrusted to the keeping of any people.

But it is a form of government which lives alone in the hearts and minds of the people. When they are wrong everything is wrong. It rests almost alone and depends almost exclusively upon the character, the vigilance, and the loyalty of the masses. When intellectual sloth and moral indifferences shall have destroyed these, armies and navies and leadership can not save it. We say, therefore, to those who come among us, join us in purpose and spirit; make yourself a part of our life; help us in this great task; and the fact that you or your ancestors were born in a foreign land shall never be laid up against you in thought or deed. Become Americans, standing for American ideals, and the places of honor stand open to receive you upon an equality with those in whose veins circulates the blood of the patriot fathers. But in the name of this Republic, in the name of the countless soldiers of liberty and saints of justice who have labored throughout the long years to make it a success, in the name of a patient people whose righteous wrath it may be dangerous to arouse, do not undertake to plant here the factional spirit or race prejudice or national antagonism. It may result in fearful sacrifice; it may mean suffering and sorrow for you and your children and your children's children even to the third and fourth generation. Be Americans through and through and the Republic will shield and protect and honor you and yours for all time. It will not discriminate against you; it will not embarrass or impede you in your struggle for individual success; it will give to you, on the other hand, as it gives to all who contribute to its glory, the shield of its protection, its liberty, and its justice, without money and without price.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on his splendid utterances. I desire only five minutes. I know the Senate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

The report made by Secretary of the Interior Lane referred to by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is a most useful report. I had the good fortune to have had it sent to my desk with other Senators, and I wish to add my appreciation of the research shown and the value of that document. It will help solve the problem after the war of the disposition of many of the men who will return to civil life. It will reclaim land. It will, I hope, tend to restore the balance between the city population and the vastly drifting population from the country cityward.

It fell to my lot, let me say to the Senator from Idaho, in my earlier manhood to live among some of the identical people who left Germany with prices on their heads because they rebelled in 1848 and 1849 against the declaration of Frederick Wilhelm in 1847 read by the Senator. They were my seniors by many years. When I was a law student across the river from St. Louis, Mo., on the Illinois side, I sat at the feet of some of those great spirits of German civil liberty who left their country, their family, and their fortune and fled to Switzerland and Holland and took passage for the United States. They remained to the day of their death loyal citizens, all of them, in spirit and in action, as read by the Senator from Idaho to-day.

Let me add, in justice to those men, just a few words to the magnificent tribute paid them by the Senator from Idaho, as well as the inspiring lesson he has inculcated to-day in the duties of an American citizen, either native or alien born.

Carl Schurz was of that immortal generation of those who worshiped at the shrine of constitutional government for Germany. Sigel was of that generation and lived at St. Louis, Mo., at the breaking out of the Civil War. Lorenz Brentano was of this number. He fled from his native country with a penalty upon him, came to Michigan, lived there an humble life for a time, and his son Theodore Brentano, of Chicago, is one of the able circuit judges of that city to-day.

There came, too, on that same emigration, with the same penalties, the elder Brand, the father of Horace L. Brand, for some years the publisher of a German-printed newspaper in the city of Chicago. There came at the same time, with that same migration, caused by the arbitrary edict of their King, Frederick Hecker, for many years a lawyer and publicist in the city of Belleville, Ill. All of these men were loyal American citizens. They gave of their best thought and of their manhood to build up such patriotic sentiments as read from Carl Schurz to-day by the Senator from Idaho.

It is when I speak of Germans of that type, some of whom I knew, whose memories to-day I revere, I feel something is due them. They were Americans. They were in their own country friends of constitutional government, and they gave and risked in that great cause all they had there. When the cause was lost and they were driven out by German sabers, they fled from that country and took up a loyal, patriotic citizenship in our Republic and manifested by their deeds and acts to the day of their death the sincerity of their belief.

One other name I desire to add to this brilliant galaxy of German citizens who came to our country, Francis Lieber, one of the greatest publicists, I think, of his generation and of any country and of any age. If I were to speak of any single text writer who by the mere force of his text, by the lucidity of his reasoning, by the soundness of his principles of constitutional liberty laid down, I should say that Francis Lieber, a native German and adopted American citizen, has had a greater influence upon my life thought and my understanding of civil government than any other person who has committed his thoughts to writing in books or has left behind him his intellectual civic labors. He wrote General Order No. 100 at the request of Abraham Lincoln in the Civil War. A most unfortunate experience was Francis Lieber's, one of the great generation of constitutional Germans, who believed that it ought to limit the right of a king as we limit our Executive by such an organic document. He lost a son in the Civil War, who went to Mississippi, who took up their cause of the States in that great struggle to decide that question. His son fought under the Stars and Bars of the Confederacy, and another son, who had settled in a Northern State, fought on the side of the Union, and this sorely beleaguered father in that time of his domestic affliction never wavered in his allegiance to the great cause of constitutional government, putting it upon the ground that this was the greatest constitutional Republic in the world, and, though one of his own sons had gone contrary to his father's belief, he still remained true to the settled convictions he carried with him in his exile from his native country.

Mr. President, I only add this because it is material, because it has grown up with me and become a part of my early life. With some of these men I have talked, and their sons and their grandsons since the war has broken out. They have been in this city. Francis Lieber's son, a retired Army officer, still lives in the city of Washington. He is of that sturdy blood. I have talked with the sons and grandsons of that generation here since war has been declared with Germany, and not one—I wish to add my corroborative testimony to that of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—not one of those men has ever expressed to me the slightest faltering in his allegiance to this Government. He believes in the crushing of the power of the present Kaiser, because he represents to them in incarnated form an obnoxious despotism. One of them said this summer a year ago with tears in his eyes, the son of one who fled from Frederick Wilhelm, "How could I be anything else and be faithful to the dust of my father, who sleeps in the land of his adoption after leaving his own country with a price on his head under the decree of an arbitrary government that refused to let him live at home?" That is the sentiment of all these men with whom I have an acquaintance, and from that early time I have kept this acquaintance with their sons and their grandsons.

I believe that notwithstanding my indisposition to take the time of the Senate that I owe this in justice to these men, and to the noble strain of freeman blood they represent in our Republic.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I can not add anything to the magnificent address of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I indorse every statement he makes and every sentiment that he has expressed. I have a letter, however, from a German, a man of full German descent, and I think I will read an extract from it. I think it shows what I believe to be a fact, that the great mass of the Germans in this country are Americans, that they are intensely patriotic, and that those who have gotten control of the German-American Alliance do not represent them at all.

This letter comes from an ordinary citizen of the country. I think it expresses in language much more eloquent than I can use, because it gives real acts and deeds, the real patriotism of the great mass of the Americans of this country who are of German descent, and shows that they have become imbued with the spirit which the Senator so eloquently portrays as essential to real, genuine patriotism. He says:

> While naturally I am more or less worried I am the proud father of three boys in the Army, all three having enlisted and in the ranks without being registered for the draft.

Then he gives their ages and their services. One of them is aged 25 and in Second Company of the Machine Gun Brigade, First Brigade, First Division. Another boy, aged 21, is in the Aviation Corps, Lake Charles, La. Another boy, aged 19, is in Company E, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment, United States Infantry. That regiment is now on the battle front in France. He says:

> I also have a number of relatives who are in the Kaiser's army, but not through choice. A cousin living in New York State, whose brothers and nephews are in the German Army, urged her youngest son to enlist and fight for Uncle Sam, which the young man did. My youngest sister has two boys at the front, my youngest brother his only son, another sister an only son, and another brother has two sons over there with the boys. Thank God that's the kind of Germans the Salzmans are!

Mr. President, I thank God that in my judgment that expresses the real patriotic Americanism of the great mass of the Germans in this country and those of German descent.

Mr. President, I am glad to note the interest that many have taken with reference to the problems that will confront this country after the war. I am glad that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has had printed in the RECORD the article that has been referred to to-day. I am glad to hear the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and other Senators from time to time express an interest in the matters and problems that are going to confront us when this war is over. I am glad to see that the people generally are discussing it. I think it is a most pressing question and one that should have our most serious consideration. Not only should we talk about it, not only should we express our views with reference to it, but we ought to begin to take some concrete and definite action that will bring together these various ideas and various views and secure a definite, specific, and earnest consideration of the problems that are going to confront us, and concrete suggestions to meet those problems.

We ought to have some organization or body created for the distinct and sole purpose of studying the conditions and investigating them and making concrete suggestions to the legislative body to meet the various problems that must confront us, that we must solve, and that will be with us before very long, I hope. At any rate they are bound to come, because peace will come at some time.

On January 4, 1918, I introduced a joint resolution, No. 119, to provide for a commission to study the situation, conditions, and the various problems, and to submit a report, and I ask in connection with my remarks that the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD, and I hope the committee to which it is referred will give it early and thoughtful consideration. It is merely suggestive. If the plan does not seem wise, let something in lieu of it be presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, without objection.

The joint resolution referred to is as follows:

> Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 119) providing for a commission to report upon legislation to meet the problems that will confront this country upon the conclusion of the war.
> Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission to consist of 27 members to serve for a period of six months from the date of appointment and, if deemed necessary by the President, to serve for a period not exceeding an additional six months. Three members of such commission shall be experienced representatives of the manufacturing industries of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the commercial interests of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the agricultural interests of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the transportation interests of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the shipping, fishing, and other marine interests of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the mining industry of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the export and import business of the country; three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of the banking and financial interests of the country; and three members thereof shall be experienced representatives of labor Each member of the commission shall receive compensation at the rate of $500 per month during his term of service, together with his necessary traveling expenses from his home to and from any place of meeting of such commission. It shall be the duty of this commission to study, investigate, and report upon the conditions and problems growing out of the war and to recommend to the President and to Congress such legislative measures as it shall deem necessary and essential for the stability, extension, promotion, and development of the foreign and domestic trade and commerce of this country after the war and to meet properly the conditions and problems that will confront us in our domestic affairs and foreign business relations upon the conclusion of the war. The President shall furnish the commission all information and data available in the executive departments of the Government which he may deem it wise and proper to submit, and he is authorized to detail, to act and advise with the commission, any governmental officials that he or the commission may deem necessary to assist in the work of the commission. Said commission shall be, and is hereby, authorized to employ experts to aid in its work, and also to employ clerks, stenographers, and such other assistants as may be necessary. All such experts and employees to be paid such compensation as the commission may deem just and reasonable upon a certificate to be issued by the chairman of the commission. For the purposes of its investigations said commission is authorized to pay the necessary traveling expenses of persons summoned before it for the giving of information upon matters pertaining to the subjects under consideration. The commission shall report from time to time to the President and to Congress, and it shall submit a final report to the President and to Congress within six months from the date of its appointment unless its term of service shall be extended by the President, as herein provided, and in such case its final report shall be submitted within 12 months from the date of its appointment.
> The sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available to pay the necessary expenses of said commission, including the compensation of the commissioners.

LOANS FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I introduce a bill, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 4855) to amend an act approved April 5, 1918, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes," was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso to paragraph 2, section 7, of the act approved April 5, 1918, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That every such advance shall be secured in the manner described in the preceding part of this section, and (except in the case of an advance secured by a loan for agricultural purposes or a loan based on live stock, having, in either case, a maturity of not exceeding 12 months) in addition thereto by collateral security, to be furnished by the bank, banker, or trust company, of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors, of a value, at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the corporation), equal to at least 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the corporation. The corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement. The bill just introduced is one framed for the purpose of meeting a very acute situation affecting the farming and the live-stock interests of the country, and, of course, affecting the food supply of this country and our allies during the war. I would like to have the Senators give some consideration to this proposed amendment of the act of April 5, 1918, as soon as they can reasonably do so, for it will be my endeavor to ask the consideration of the bill by the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

The bill proposes to amend the war finance corporation act by providing a more reasonable method for that corporation to make advances to banks which in turn have made advances to live-stock growers and to farmers. The bank facilities of the country under existing legislation do not meet the situation. We know that short-time loans to farmers and live-stock men are usually of very little avail, and at this particular time, when the farmers and live-stock growers everywhere have suffered two years of drought and are now passing through the third, some reasonable relief must be accorded to them. It is the purpose of this bill to afford that relief in a reasonable way.

This thought passed through my mind in direct connection with the discussion which has taken place on the floor of the Senate this morning. Attention has been graphically directed to the congestion of our population in large centers. I am inclined to believe that the people of this country do not realize the baneful effects of that condition, and that they will be magnified it seems to me there is but little doubt.

At the close of this war another epoch in our history will have been completed. The previous epoch was the Civil War. If we turn back to conditions as they existed at the beginning of the Civil War, we will realize to some extent the effect which the last epoch of our history has had upon our civilization. In 1860 only 10 per cent of the people of the United States resided in cities of more than 50,000 population. To-day 10 per cent of our population reside in three cities and 30 per cent of our population reside in cities of more than 50,000. The causes which brought about this condition are not well known, but they are fundamental and easily ascertained.

The condition presented to-day by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and very logically and somewhat in detail in a masterly way presented by Justice McChord, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shows one cause of the trouble in the transportation system of the country, and to my mind it has been perhaps the greatest cause. But there have been other causes. In the financial system of this country before the passage of the Federal reserve act no provision was made for giving any aid or assistance by the Federal Government through a banking system to the farmers of this country. All the legislation in that respect had been enacted for the benefit of the commercial and the speculative interests of the country.

That has been changed to some extent. At that time we had one financial center controlling the very lifeblood of the commerce and activities of the country. To-day we have at least 12. We are moving in the right direction. We may have to move further.

The railroads of the country beyond any question contributed directly toward the building up of these large centers and against the interests diversified throughout the country. My own town is situated about halfway between Chicago and the Pacific coast and about halfway between El Paso on the south and Denver on the north. Carload after carload of commodities sent from Chicago to the Pacific coast has passed through the State of New Mexico. Time and again cars of sugar have passed through the town in which I live to the city of Denver, 400 miles beyond, at a less rate than the local freight rate to that town, and it could be shipped back to the town at a less rate. That process was indulged in frequently for the purpose of saving freight. They could ship, say, 400 miles farther and by local freight back and save money on the cost of the freight direct.

Those are some of the conditions. That they must be remedied there can be no doubt. All over this country you see monuments to the failure of industries which have sprung up in localities which ought to have fostered and nourished the industry. This result was due to the fact that the railroads of the country discriminated against the locality in the matter of freight. The State of New Mexico, which is the third largest State in the Union in the production of wool, ships every pound of it back to the Atlantic seaboard and there it is manufactured and returned to clothe the people of that State. Other communities have had like experience.

I agree with Senators who have made their suggestions here this morning that this is the time when these things must be considered. We can not begin too soon. The population by reason of the conditions existing now has gathered more than ever in the large centers. It had been necessary to do it under existing conditions, and the problem after the war will be much greater than that before the war.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. President, I desire to make some reference to the rather chilly and chilling prophecy of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in regard to coal. I, of course, do not assume the power of vision which perhaps others may be entitled to assume, but I do not believe that the prophecy of the Senator from Utah should go to the country at this time without some statement which may lend some hope to the people of the country that they are not going to freeze to death next winter. I think that hope is found in the reports which have been published from time to time in the newspapers of the country regarding the coal supply. Only a few days ago I observed in the report that the output of coal for the previous week was twelve and one-half million tons, and that if the output were kept up at that rate during the favorable season the total shortage would be only a little over 8,000,000 tons. Of course, it is hoped and it is anticipated that that 8,000,000 tons and more will be supplied, but if it were not that shortage which was indicated there is less than 1 per cent of the full requirements of the industries and of the homes of the country. The shortage the last coal year was at least 15 per cent, or about 75,000,000 tons. The requirement a year ago——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senator from New Mexico will please suspend.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I hope I have said enough to lead the people of the country to have some hope that they will not freeze to death next winter.

Mr. SMOOT. No one has said that they would freeze to death. There is no shortage of coal; it is a shortage of transportation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order of the Senate, the Senate stands adjourned until Monday next.

Thereupon (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 1, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we approach Thee with mingled feelings of hope and disappointment, yet with profound faith that in the dispensation of Thy providence right shall prevail.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

We mourn because our peace-loving Nation has been turned into a camp of warriors by no choice of ours, but through circumstances over which we have had no control.

Our hearts are filled with sorrow because the flower of our young manhood and that of our allied nations are being swept away like chaff before the wind.

Have mercy, O God, our Father, and comfort us by the precious hope that victory shall crown our arms and peace be established once more and bring joy to a weary, warring world. So let Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, July 29, 1918, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn to meet on next Monday.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, August 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of William J. Cragin, of Philadelphia, Pa., urging retirement for superannuated Government employees; to the Committee on Labor.

Also (by request), petition of the Chicago Law Enforcement League, urging Congress and the President not to do anything to advertise or encourage the tenets of or practices of any religious body; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), resolution of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, asserting their loyalty and support of the Government in the prosecution of the war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), resolution of the Chicago Federation of Labor, protesting against the labor "rider" in the civil appropriation bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also (by request), petition of Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank, of Spokane, Wash., urging $2.40 wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also (by request), petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., and of citizens of Randolph County, Ill., urging the passage of a bill to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), petition of various marketing and farmers' associations of Kansas City, Mo., requesting suspension of our immigration laws so that farm labor may be secured; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also (by request), petition of church board of Bethel Class for the Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene, Yuma, Colo., urging national bone-dry prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of St. Louis Surfacer & Paint Co., of St. Louis, Mo., favoring H. R. 12143; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also (by request), resolution of the Corporation Commission of Oklahoma, concerning class and commodity freight rates in the State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also (by request), resolution of the National Leather & Shoe Finders' Association, favoring the repeal of the Sherman and Clayton Acts; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 5, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray Thee to give us this day a profound sense of our divine obligation. We receive all our blessings from Thy hand. Thou art the author of every good and perfect gift. We are to stand in our work this day not only before the bar of human reason but before Thy searching eye, Thy divine judgment, and Thy eternal plan of life. We pray Thee to save us from error, from mistake, from sin. Guide us so that we may perform our duty as in Thy sight and may accomplish Thy will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
August 5, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of the congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of 35 citizens of Onondaga County, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition from the Board of Aldermen of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent rent profiteering, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation granting reduced railway fares to soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, on June 27 I submitted some remarks on the question of the proposed Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In the course of that statement I introduced two letters from the Constitutional League of America, one from its president, Mr. Charles S. Fairchild, and the other from the secretary of its executive committee, Mr. Everett P. Wheeler. It has been stated in a certain publication since then that that organization was defunct. I have here a letter from its field secretary which I should like to have the Secretary read, because I think it is due to the organization that its statement shall appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL LEAGUE,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1918.

Senator FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
1521 K Street, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: It will seem a rather small affair to you, but the "women managers" have resorted to some personalized and petty politics, reflecting upon you and this league, upon which I believe you may welcome a few facts.

In the Woman Citizen of July 27 it was stated that the letters you submitted from this league on June 27 were "from an organization that was defunct, with a president who has been for some time dead."

I do not know whether you met Mr. Fairchild, our president, while he was in Washington, but it is a fact that he was here on the 25th, 26th, and 27th, and sat near me in one of the visitors' galleries when you made your able speech.

I inclose a copy of a letter I am sending the Woman Citizen on the subject. That paper is notoriously inaccurate. In the July 6 issue they said you submitted a long-winded letter from "other Republicans." As a matter of fact, Mr. Fairchild was Secretary of the Treasury under Cleveland and is a Democrat, and Mr. Wheeler was former Democratic candidate for governor of New York—although, of course, the American Constitutional League is bipartisan.

It is the usual custom of our ladies who seek to "purify" politics to attack their opponents personally when it is impossible to answer arguments, and in such personal attacks they manifest a supreme contempt for mere facts.

Respectfully, yours,

J. S. EICHELBERGER,
Field Secretary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the letter from the field secretary to the publication read also.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL LEAGUE,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1918.

To the EDITOR THE WOMAN CITIZEN,
New York City.

DEAR MADAM: In behalf of the American Constitutional League I desire to call your attention to a gross misstatement in one of your leading editorials of July 27.

You declare that letters read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from this league by Senator BRANDEGEE, of Connecticut, were "from an organization that was defunct, with a president who has been for some time dead."

I beg to remind you that the Hon. Charles S. Fairchild, Secretary of the Treasury under Grover Cleveland, and president of the American Constitutional League, was present in the visitors' gallery with me during the entire debate on June 27. He met a number of Senators. Mr. Fairchild is no more dead than our organization is "defunct," and if your clipping service is efficient you will be able to discover that it was Mr. Fairchild who was selected to preside at the great "win-the-war" meeting recently held in New York City.

As for the American Constitutional League, it is concentrating the efforts of its members on war work and constructive patriotism, presenting briefs and arguments against the Federal woman-suffrage amendment only when the menace is most acute.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Senator BRANDEGEE and to the editor of the Woman Patriot.

Very truly, yours,

J. S. EICHELBERGER,
Field Secretary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that along with those letters the articles of association and list of officers of the league which is attached thereto may be printed in the RECORD and the whole done in brevier type.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL LEAGUE—ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.

"First. The name of the association shall be the American Constitutional League.

"Second. The object of the league shall be to maintain the fundamental principle of the Constitution of the United States, which is to put the control of local affairs, especially of the suffrage, under the direction of the several States, each within its own boundaries. We welcome the cooperation of all who oppose the campaign for a Federal suffrage amendment during the present war, whether or not they are prepared to commit themselves finally to opposition to that amendment.

"Third. The officers of the association shall be a president, 11 vice presidents, secretary, treasurer, and an executive committee of 7, who may add to their number of vice presidents. Until the president is elected the chairman of the executive committee shall be president ex officio.

"Fourth. The officers shall be elected for the term of one year or until their successors have been chosen, and the executive committee shall have the general management of the association, the collection and distribution of funds, the election of members, and the calling of meetings.

"Fifth. There shall be an annual meeting of the association on the first Wednesday of December in each year.

"The officers shall be elected at this annual meeting. The executive committee shall have power to fill vacancies.

"Sixth. There shall be two classes of members, sustaining and active. Sustaining members shall pay annual dues of $5 or upward. Active members shall pay annual dues of $1. All dues shall be payable in December. Dues for 1918 are payable now.

"Seventh. The executive committee shall have power to make by-laws containing further provisions for the government of the association.

"Eighth. The constitution may be amended by the vote of a majority of those present at any annual meeting or at any special meeting where notice of the proposed amendment has been given in the call of the meeting.

"Officers: President, Charles S. Fairchild; treasurer, Walter C. Childs. Executive committee: Everett P. Wheeler, chairman; Walter C. Childs, Francis C. Landon, Waldo Morse, John C. Ten Eyck, Lucien Howe, Edmund R. Terry. Field secretary, J. S. Eichelberger."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it is immaterial to me what these publications say about me or my views upon this question; in the words of the Apostle, "These things move me not," but I did think it was due to this organization to have its secretary state to the Senate over his own signature what the fact is as to its existence.

That is all I care to say upon the subject at this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, while the subject of woman suffrage is before the Senate I desire to discuss the Federal amendment briefly and to submit certain observations regarding it more especially to those of my colleagues who are opposing it on the ground that it violates the so-called doctrine of State rights.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I dislike to interrupt the Senator in this discussion, but unless the Senator will consent that I may introduce several bills I shall have to ask for the regular order. There are one or two bills that are important that I should like to introduce and have referred so that they may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do. I shall wait until the routine morning business is almost disposed of before I proceed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4857) authorizing an Army account of advances for Army appropriations, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4858) to provide method of settlement for materials, stores, and supplies transferred between different bureaus, departments, or agencies of the Government, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 4859) to amend article 119 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGES OF DRAFT AGE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN introduced a bill (S. 4856) to amend sections 2, 4, and 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In this connection I ask that the proposed change in the draft-age bill may be printed in full in the RECORD, and immediately after the bill is printed in the RECORD I desire to have printed as a part of it or rather in connection with it the study of the whole subject as made by the Provost Marshal General and reported by him to the Chief of Staff and through him to the Secretary of War. It gives the reasons for the proposed change in the draft age and the number of men who will be raised under the proposed change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and such will be the order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[The matter in roman shows present law; the part in small capitals indicates amendments to the present law; and the part in brackets shows matter proposed to be omitted from present law.]

A bill (S. 4856) to amend sections 2, 4, and 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens and male persons residing in the United States, not alien enemies, who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of [twenty-one and thirty] EIGHTEEN AND FORTY-FIVE, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act: PROVIDED, THAT THE PRESIDENT MAY DRAFT SUCH PERSONS LIABLE TO MILITARY SERVICE IN SUCH SEQUENCE OF AGES AND AT SUCH TIME OR TIMES AS HE MAY PRESCRIBE: And provided further, That a citizen or subject of a country neutral in the present war who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be relieved from liability to military service upon his making a declaration, in accordance with such regulations as the President may prescribe, withdrawing his intention to become a citizen of the United States, which shall operate and be held to cancel his declaration of intention to become an American citizen, and he shall forever be debarred from becoming a citizen of the United States.

2. That the provision of section four of said act, "persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency," be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

Persons engaged in OCCUPATIONS OR EMPLOYMENTS found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency.

3. That section four of said act be amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso:

PROVIDED, THAT NOTHING IN THIS SECTION CONTAINED SHALL PREVENT THE PRESIDENT, IF HE DEEMS IT ADVISABLE, FROM APPOINTING AS A MEMBER OF A LOCAL BOARD ANY PERSON RESIDING OUTSIDE THE SUBDIVISION OR AREA IN WHICH SUCH LOCAL BOARD HAS JURISDICTION, OR FROM TRANSFERRING A MEMBER OF ONE LOCAL BOARD TO ANOTHER LOCAL BOARD OUTSIDE THE SUBDIVISION OR AREA IN WHICH SUCH PERSON RESIDES.

4. That section five of said act be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

That all male persons between the ages of [twenty-one and thirty] EIGHTEEN AND FORTY-FIVE, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, and upon proclamation by the President or other public notice given by him or by his direction stating the time OR TIMES and place OR PLACES of ANY such registration, it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages, except officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, and the National Guard and Naval Militia while in the service of the United States, to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act; and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of [said] ANY SUCH proclamation or ANY SUCH other PUBLIC notice as aforesaid given by the President or by his direction; and any person who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in a district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year and shall thereupon be duly registered: Provided, That in the call of the docket precedence shall be given, in courts trying the same, to the trial of criminal proceedings under this act:

Provided further, That persons shall be subject to registration as herein provided who shall have attained their [twenty-first] EIGHTEENTH birthday and who shall not have attained their [thirty-first] FORTY-SIXTH birthday on or before the day set for the registration IN ANY SUCH PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT OR ANY SUCH OTHER PUBLIC NOTICE GIVEN BY HIM OR BY HIS DIRECTION, and all persons so registered shall be and remain subject to draft into the forces hereby authorized unless exempted or excused therefrom as in this act provided: PROVIDED FURTHER, THAT THE PRESIDENT MAY AT SUCH INTERVALS AS HE MAY DESIRE FROM TIME TO TIME REQUIRE ALL MALE PERSONS WHO HAVE ATTAINED THE AGE OF EIGHTEEN YEARS SINCE THE LAST PRECEDING DATE OF REGISTRATION AND ON OR BEFORE THE NEXT DATE SET FOR REGISTRATION BY PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT, EXCEPT SUCH PERSONS AS ARE EXEMPT FROM REGISTRATION HEREUNDER, TO REGISTER IN THE SAME MANNER AND SUBJECT TO THE SAME REQUIREMENTS AND LIABILITIES AS THOSE PREVIOUSLY REGISTERED UNDER THE TERMS HEREOF: And provided further, That in the case of temporary absence from actual place of legal residence of any person liable to registration as provided herein, such registration may be made by mail under regulations to be prescribed by the President.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
Washington, July 27, 1918.

From: The Provost Marshal General.
To: Chief of Staff, War Department, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Changes of draft age.

(1) Pursuant to your memorandum of July 24, transmitting a copy (secret) of the approved military program for 1918–19, and calling for the draft of a proposed bill lowering the draft age to 19 and raising it to 40, I transmit herewith estimates of the effectives obtainable by the enlargement of the draft ages in the shape of three studies covering age groups 32–40 combined with 19–20, 32–45 combined with 19–20, and 32–45 combined with 18–20, and showing the estimated effectives for each combination.

2. These figures were made by a careful calculation in this office, checking the calculations at various points with experience in the several items represented; the basic figures, viz, the total males of the respective age groups, were ascertained by comparison of reliable insurance actuarial figures with census tables projected to date.

This explanation is made because the totals shown are considerably below what might have been supposed to be the ample size of the reservoir in the higher ages. The combination ages 32–40 and 19–20 (see study No. 1) designated in your memorandum would yield only a little over a million and a half men (or half a million less than the total amount called for by the program for the nine months, October, 1918–June, 1919). By including age 45 at the top, the second combination (see study No. 2) would yield only a million and three-quarters effectives. By taking the extreme step and adding age 18 at the bottom and including age 45 at the top (see study No. 3) something over two million and one-quarter effectives would be obtained.

3. This seems to indicate that the bill as drafted should at least provide authority to call into service the extreme age of 45 at the top and 18 at the bottom; and it is accordingly recommended that the draft of a bill be prepared with those ages as the limits.

4. Furthermore, the authority to draw upon this new reservoir must be obtained immediately. The estimated number of Class I men under the present ages (and including the class of 1918, age 21, that has been registered under the President's proclamation) will be only about 100,000 men (and may fall below that figure) on September 1, 1918, after filling the calls indicated for July and August, and making deductions for the unexpected heavy losses due to a rush in June and July to the Navy, Marine Corps, and Emergency Fleet.

5. September call: The first question which presents itself is the very urgent one, How to meet the September call for 200,000 men with considerably less than that number in Class I to be drawn upon? There is only one way I can see for accomplishing this, and that is to provide for weekly registration of men becoming 21 since last registration day, June 5, 1918. We could hold such registration, after proper proclamation by the President and upon a bulletin order to boards, designating Monday of each week as registration day, and requiring the necessary personnel to assemble at the headquarters of local boards on that day to effect the registration. The first registration day would be a heavy one requiring, perhaps, special personnel, but the subsequent weekly registration days should be handled with greater ease. In this way we could hope to get, under a rush procedure, approximately 80,000 men available for the September call, which, added to those remaining in Class I, would give a total barely sufficient to fill the September call.

6. We must exclude, of course, from consideration in filling the September quota, registrants who become liable to our draft under the British and Canadian treaty, as it is not practicable to have a registration of these men until August 29, 30 days after the ratification of the treaty; and it is not until 30 days thereafter that their right to elect to service with the British and Canadian contingents ceases.

7. Subsequent calls: The second and more difficult question is, How can we supply, on time, the 150,000 men required for each of the succeeding months of October, November, and December? The British-Canadian treaty would help out to the extent—it is estimated—of about 50,000 men, which is not even the conventional "drop in the bucket."

The House reconvenes on August 19 and the Senate on August 26. How long a period will be consumed in the discussion and enactment of legislation authorizing the extension of the draft ages and in what form such legislation will be enacted it is difficult to anticipate. And yet we must anticipate it if we are to establish as expeditious procedure under it which will produce on time the quotas for the months above stated. If we could assume that the law would be enacted in the remaining days of August, we would have a basis of calculating the results to be obtained under it. As I stated to the Senate Military Committee at its last hearing, a minimum period of 90 days is necessary to enroll and classify all the men registered in the additional classes suggested. We can not therefore wait for the completion of Class I but must take men irrespective of their order numbers as fast as they find their way into Class I.

8. I suggest for discussion with the Military Committees of the two Houses the tentative form of bill hereto attached, to the end that we may obtain assurances that the bill will pass in such a form as will permit me to proceed now with the printing of the large number of forms, including the questionnaire, necessary in connection with the additional registration. The Printing Office contemplates a period of 30 days for the printing of the forms, so it is necessary to move with great promptness. Of course, the distribution of the forms can go on during the period of printing, with the assurance that they will not be invalidated by changes in the legislation. Perhaps, also, we could receive assurances that the registration could be enacted by the House in the period following its reconvening, so that it could be taken up promptly by the Senate on August 26 and passed there. This would enable us to contemplate September 5 as a national registration day, and the machinery of the selective draft operating very soon thereafter in grinding out a Class I available for filling October, November, and December contingents.

E. H. CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General.

ESTIMATE OF EFFECTIVES OBTAINABLE BY ENLARGEMENTS OF DRAFT AGES.

SUMMARY OF STUDIES 1, 2, AND 3.

Estimated numbers of effectives for each age group.

(b) Group D	219,042			(b) 30 per cent of line 10.
12. Net effectives			448,086

Explanation.

1. Line 1 is taken from Prudential insurance actuarial tables of July, 1918, compared with census tables projected in this office. The actuarial tables are brought down to date by the actuaries, and the census tables thus brought down at the bureau are not yet available.

2. Line 2 is taken from same source as line 1.

3. Line 3 is taken from industrial index ledger sheets for occupational registrants. The ratios there shown are: Class I equals 31 per cent; Classes II to IV, deferred for industry and agriculture only, equals 4 per cent. Other deferred classes equals 64 per cent.

The percentage here taken is the same as for ages 21–30 classification. This is too large, in that many more such men in ages 32–40 would get their exemption on dependency grounds, without invoking industrial or agricultural necessity. But it is too small, in that a larger proportion of men in ages 30–40 would be entitled to such deferment. Hence, these two differences may be estimated to set off each other.

4. Line 4 represents the corresponding figure for the 1917 draft. These are too low, if anything, as the numbers of State officials, etc., increase in the higher ages.

5. Line 5 is taken from reports in this office on delinquents, figuring 3.9 per cent of total registration. This would be too high because the total delinquents include at least some portion of the marrieds; hence 3 per cent is a safer figure.

7. Line 7 is thus figured: Total enlistments (Army and Navy) to date 1,400,000; of which, those above 30 are estimated at 10 per cent, or 140,000; of these, 120,000 may be estimated to be within ages 32–40; deduct 20,000 marrieds, leaving 100,000 now enlisted; add 50,000 more probable enlistments before liability accrues in the new draft, 150,000.

8. Line 8 is found thus: In the first registration, 13 per cent were aliens; and the census report shows that the percentage of aliens' ages 20–30 and 30–40 or 45 is not substantially different. But many aliens have left the country, and 12 per cent is a safer figure. Of these, one-quarter are subjects of Great Britain and Italy, who will presumably become liable and largely available; hence the deduction should be corrected to 9 per cent. This might seem too large, by a considerable factor, because in the 1917 draft only 50 per cent of called aliens obtained exemption on that ground, another 33 per cent obtaining it on other grounds, while 17 per cent of all aliens were certified for service; this would seem to show that in any given number of aliens the net number to be deducted on that ground is nearer to 50 per cent. But as the 33 per cent who were exempted on other grounds are already included under the deferments already deducted, and as the 17 per cent volunteers are likely not to reappear (partly because of the Slavic and Polish Legions, etc.), there should be no reduction of the 9 per cent, which is the figure here taken on line 7.

Declarants are not deducted; the neutrals being a negligible amount.

9. Line 9 is based on recent reports in this office.

11. Line 11 (a) is based on the returns of classification of 1918 showing 10 per cent.

Line 11 (b) is based on similar figures, which show not quite 20 per cent, including camp rejections. To this must be added 10 per cent for ages 32–40, according to advices from the Surgeon General's office. This gives 30 per cent in all.

Ages 19 and 20.

(b) Group D	320,466			(b) 20 per cent of line 10.
12. Net effectives			1,121,634

Explanation.

Lines 1 and 2 are taken from the same tables as for ages 32 to 40.

Line 3 obviously here can not use the same 4 per cent as for ages 21 to 30; the ratio one-half of 1 per cent is here taken.

Line 4 similarly is taken at a negligible figure of one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Line 5 is reckoned as for ages 32 to 40.

Line 7 is based upon reports of July 26, 1918, from The Adjutant General's Office, as set forth later, in study No. 3.

Line 8 is based upon census figures showing that the numbers of aliens of ages 15 to 19 are less than one-half the number for the next five-year period, while the native born are 10 per cent to 20 per cent more numerous than in the higher-age period. Thus the 9 per cent for ages 21 to 30 should here be reduced to 3 per cent.

Line 9. Emergency fleet withdrawals for these age years should not be allowed.

Line 11 is based on the per cent for ages 21–30. Three officers of the Surgeon General's office agree in believing that the ages 19–20 or 18–20 do not permit of any lower percentage than for ages 21–30.

12. Net effectives			601,236

Explanation.

Lines 1 to 6 are reckoned as for ages 32 to 40 in study No. 1.

Line 7 is thus reckoned: Enlistments above age 30 equals 140,000; deduct 30,000 married, leaving 110,000; add 60,000 more probable anticipatory enlistments, making 170,000 in all.

Line 8 is reckoned as for ages 32 to 40 in study No. 1.

Line 9 is based on reports in this office.

Line 11 is reckoned as for ages 32 to 40, but adding 5 per cent more for ages 40 to 45 (as recommended by the Surgeon General's Office), making 15 per cent, or an average of 12 per cent added for 32 to 45; or 32 per cent in all.

11. Less physical rejects			480,700
(a) Groups B, C	160,233			(a) 10 per cent of line 10.
(b) Group D	320,466			(b) 20 per cent of line 10.
12. Net effectives			1,121,634

Explanation.

Lines 1 and 2 are taken from the same tables as for ages 32 to 40.

Line 3 obviously here can not use the same 4 per cent as for ages 21 to 30; the ratio one-half of 1 per cent is here taken.

Line 4 similarly is taken at a negligible figure of one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Line 5 is reckoned as for ages 32 to 40.

Line 7 is based upon reports of July 26, 1918, from The Adjutant General's office, as set forth later, in study No. 3.

Line 8 is based upon census figures showing that the numbers of aliens of ages 15 to 19 are less than one-half the number for the next five-year period, while the native born are 10 per cent to 20 per cent more numerous than in the higher-age period. Thus the 9 per cent for ages 21 to 30 should here be reduced to 3 per cent.

Line 9. Emergency fleet withdrawals for these age years should not be allowed.

Line 11 is based on the per cent for ages 21–30. Three officers of the Surgeon General's office agree in believing that the ages 19–20 do not permit of any lower percentage than for ages 21–30.

STUDY NO. 3.

Ages 32–45 (inclusive)	601,236

(b) Group D	331,716			(b) 32 per cent of line 10.
12. Net effectives			601,236

Explanation.

Lines 1 to 6 are reckoned as for ages 32 to 40 in study No. 1.

Line 7 is thus reckoned: Enlistments above age 30 equals 140,000; deduct 30,000 married, leaving 110,000; add 60,000 more probable anticipatory enlistments, making 170,000 in all.

Line 8 is reckoned as for ages 32 to 40 in study No. 1.

Line 9 is based on reports in this office.

Line 11 is reckoned as for ages 32 to 40, but adding 5 per cent more for ages 40 to 45 (as recommended by the Surgeon General's Office), making 15 per cent; or an average of 12 per cent added for 32 to 45, or 32 per cent in all.

Ages 18 to 22.

12. Net effectives			1,797,609

Explanation.

Lines 1 to 5, 8, and 11 are obtained as for ages 19 to 20 in study No. 1.

Line 9, Emergency Fleet withdrawals for these ages should not be allowed.

Line 11 is reckoned as for ages 19 to 20 in study No. 1.

Line 7 is based on The Adjutant General's Office estimates of July 26, 1918, as follows:

1. On account of the present arrangement of records in the several offices it would require the services of some hundred clerks for months to obtain an accurate count of the number of men in the military service of the United States between the ages of 18 and 20. An accurate count can only be had from a study of all enlistment papers in The Adjutant General's Office, the Navy Department, and the Marine Corps. An estimate may be made from the actual number of enlistments since January 1, 1917, and the number in this age group in service at the present time is 244,326, of which number 36,549 are estimated to be under 19 and 207,777 are estimated to be of ages 19 to 20.

2. This estimate has been arrived at in the following manner:

(a) Enlisted men in the Regular Army and National Guard between 18 and 20.

The chief clerk of the recruiting department of The Adjutant General's Office makes the statement that "due to the Selective Service Regulations practically all enlistments in the Regular Army and National Guard since January 1, 1918, represent men outside of the draft age, and of these about 70 per cent are under the age." This estimate was verified by his assistant, who thought that possibly the reenlistments of older men might place as many as 75 per cent below the draft age. Another assistant in the department at First and B Streets estimated between 60 and 70 per cent, so that the average estimate of 70 per cent had been used in this computation. An actual count of current enlistment papers selected at random revealed 80 out of 115 to be below the draft age. The total number of enlistments in the Regular Army during this period was 113,794, which figure it is estimated is about 90 per cent of the combined figures for the Regular Army and National Guard. Therefore the total enlistments in the above would be approximately 126,436. But this figure includes men registered on June 5, 1918, the percentage of which is estimated to be 45 per cent. The net figure, then, for the age group 18–20 is estimated at 69,540. Of these, 15 per cent, or 10,430, are under the age of 19. For the years 1916 and 1917 an average estimate by the same experts divides the enlistments into three age groups by percentages as follows:

	Per cent.
Under 21	27
21–30	57
Over 30	16

On this basis of the 235,000 enlistments for 1916–17, exclusive of the National Guard, 63,450 would be between 18 and 20. Assuming that as many of these attained the age of 21 by June 5, 1918, as were enlisted during 1916 under age, it is estimated that this figure 63,450 would be approximately the number of men now in the service enlisted prior to January 1, 1918. No figures for the National Guard are available. Hence the total strength of the Regular Army between 18 and 20 is approximated at 133,000 and under 19 at 19,950.

(b) Navy: The approximate strength of the Navy and Naval Reserve forces at this time is 400,000 enlisted men, or a little over about half in each. Of the 200,000 men in the Navy proper, very close to 50 per cent are between the ages 21–30. Of the 100,000 men outside of these ages it is estimated that 75 per cent are under and 25 per cent over. In the Navy, then, 75,000 are to-day under 21. Of the 200,000 in the Naval Reserves, between 80 and 88 per cent are within the ages 21–30. Assuming 170,000 to be a fair figure, 30,000 remain, which are equally divided into two age groups—those over 30 and those under 21. Hence the number of men in the naval forces under 21 is approximated at 97,500. Of these it is estimated that 15 per cent, or 14,625, are under the age of 19. The above estimates are furnished by the clerk of the enlisted personnel of the Navy.

(c) Marine Corps: Total minors enlisted since April 1, 1917, 13,826, or, applying 15 per cent, 1,974 are under 19.

3. Summarized estimate:

	18–20.	Under 19.	19 and 20.
Army	133,000	19,950	113,050
Navy	97,500	14,625	82,875
Marine Corps	13,826	1,974	11,852
Total	244,326	36,549	207,777

JULY 29, 1918.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Subject: Proposed amendments to selective-service act approved May 18, 1917.

1. The first amendment brings all male citizens and male persons residing in the United States, not alien enemies, who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 18 and 45, both inclusive, within the terms of the selective-service law.

It is only necessary to change the ages, inasmuch as males under 21 may, under the laws of the United States, declare their intention to become citizens of the United States.

2. The second amendment is as follows:

"Provided, That the President may draft such persons liable to military service in such sequence of ages and at such time or times as he may prescribe."

This amendment should be incorporated for the purpose of enabling the President to call, for instance, persons between the ages of 32 and 40 or of the age of 20 before calling persons between the ages of 18 and 19 or between the ages of 40 and 45.

The amendment makes it possible to call persons by classes as to ages.

3. The third amendment strikes out the words "in industries, including agriculture," and substitutes therefor the words "in occupations or employments."

This amendment is made to the section of the act which provides for the deferred classification or temporary discharge of persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency.

Experience has shown that some district boards are inclined to give a narrow construction to the word "industries," and it is thought that the words "occupations or employments" should be substituted for "industries, including agriculture," not only for the purpose of preventing the difficulties arising by reason of the narrow construction placed upon the word "industries" but also for the purpose of enabling a somewhat broader construction of the law in view of the fact that the military age is to be increased and a wider latitude should therefore be given to district boards to give deferred classification to persons whose occupations or employments may be found necessary to the maintenance of the national interest.

4. The fourth amendment is as follows:

"Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the President, if he deems it advisable, from appointing as a member of a local board any person residing outside the subdivision or area in which such local board has jurisdiction, or from transferring a member of one local board to another local board outside the subdivision or area in which such person resides."

This amendment is advisable for the reason that the selective-service act prevents the President from appointing as a member of a local board any person who resides outside the jurisdiction of that board. It has been almost impossible in some districts to find three qualified persons resident in the district to serve as members of the local board. This amendment will remove that difficulty and will also enable a member to be transferred from one local board to another local board in the interest of good administration of the draft law.

5. The next amendment that needs any explanation is as follows:

"Provided further, That the President may, at such intervals as he may desire, from time to time require all male persons who have attained the age of 18 years since the last preceding date of registration and on or before the next date set for registration by proclamation by the President, except such persons as are exempt from registration hereunder, to register in the same manner and subject to the same requirements and liabilities as those previously registered under the terms hereof."

This amendment is necessary in order to provide for the continued registration of boys as they reach 18 years of age. The selective-service act does not provide for the registration of persons as they reach 21 years of age, and therefore this amendment is necessary.

E. H. CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator a question? I desire to know if the Senator expects to call the Committee on Military Affairs together immediately to consider the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The committee has been called for to-morrow at 10.30.

Mr. CURTIS. Can the chairman of the committee give me any idea when the bill will be likely to be reported to the Senate?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am in hopes that the committee will be able to report it out in a few days. I think the study which I have had printed in the RECORD will give all the information it is possible to obtain and as much information as could be obtained from hearing innumerable witnesses.

Mr. CURTIS. I asked the question with a view of making a suggestion, that if the bill is to be reported out within a week Senators should be called back that we may get a quorum and act upon it and similar bills as soon as possible. If the Senator will notify me when the bill is ready to be reported, I will gladly notify the Senators on this side and urge them to return so that a quorum may be here to consider it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state to the Senator that I entertain exactly the same view, and if we can get the bill reported out in a few days, under the unanimous-consent agreement under which the recess was had, I shall suggest the calling back of the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. I am very glad to have the Senator make that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. The information furnished by the Provost Marshal General will be printed in the RECORD. I take it this same information was furnished to the House, and in case the House asked that it be printed in the RECORD I hope the Clerk will see there is only one print in the RECORD made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is a very reasonable request, and I think it will be complied with.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to have him inform me whether there is a date upon the memorandum supplied by the Provost Marshal General?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator the letter of information is dated July 27, 1918.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And in that connection the letter of transmittal from the Secretary of War to me of these papers is dated August 2, 1918.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator what is the age limit proposed?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Eighteen and forty-five.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will follow the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and take whatever steps may be necessary to have a quorum of the Senate brought here so that we can take up this as well as other measures.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall certainly follow that suggestion, and I am glad to know that I have the cooperation of Senators on the other side.

MAIL OF AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on Thursday last I made a few desultory remarks about the wretched mail facilities to our boys in France and endeavored to restate very briefly what has been said by the Postmaster General, that that statement of wretched mail facilities was without foundation.

I find, Mr. President, since Thursday last I have been overwhelmed by letters from all over the United States from parents who are complaining, and complaining much more bitterly than I did in anything I had to say at that time.

I wish to read briefly—it will take but a moment—a few excerpts from letters from various parts of the country from parents on this subject, not only that we may understand the situation, but that we may correct that situation.

I do not know of any other way, Mr. President, in which I can be of service in this regard except thus publicly to call it to the attention of the country and to the attention of the Senate and to ask the cooperation of the Senate then in an endeavor to remedy these conditions; and I am going to continue calling attention to this subject until some remedy has been applied by the Government.

First, I quote from Shohola, Pa.:

> My son left Newport News with the —— division May 8. Since that date five letters per week have been mailed. The inclosed postal from him shows the date of his last letter to us, June 26, mailed May 8. His last letter to us says that he had received only six letters. I entered a vigorous protest and received in reply a circular letter having the nerve to state, "They are moved from billet to billet and from camp to camp, etc." Very good, but the kitchen and the food follow; why not the mail? As a matter of fact, this division were in a particular place.

Here is a letter from South Carolina, a parent writing of his son:

> He sailed from Newport News early in May, and as you see by the postal I inclose, dated July 12, he is still waiting for a letter, and we have written regularly. This is one of many communications received from friends and relatives on the other side, many of whom have never received a single one of the numerous letters written them.

Here is one from Defiance, Ohio, from a parent relating in a word his boy's feelings when letters come:

> Recently our dear boy wrote "We are crazy for letters from home. They are the bright points in our lives, and we'd die without them. We would rather receive a letter than anything else on earth."

Here is one from Mount Vernon, N. Y.:

> Judge Blank, who just returned from France, said he heard many, many complaints of the poor mail service. I know from my own experience and from that of many of my neighbors that the service is about as poor as it could possibly be. Either indifference or gross inefficiency is the only answer.

From East Providence, R. I.:

> Your statements are certainly conservative. In the case of my son, who is in a Massachusetts regiment, since March last 60 letters have been forwarded to him overseas, and at June 15—the date of his letter to me—but 2 of the 60 letters had been received. From him during this period 5 letters have reached us. You can well imagine the effect—both on the soldier and on the parents—of such delay during these anxious days, when news from the front or from home is of vital interest.
> Apart from the sentimental side of the case, the morale of the soldier is seriously affected by such delay. There is no complaint in the letters received—he is too good a soldier—but, reading between the lines, I can see that he is disheartened and discouraged at the poor return his country is rendering him in this respect for his sacrifice and service.

I have selected these letters at random from various States, so that it may be obvious to you that what we complain of is not confined to a particular locality or a particular State, an isolated set of men or women, but that it is general all over the Union.

[1] For details see following table.
[2] Estimated figures.
[3] Allowance is made for an estimated deduction of 50,000 men on account of enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps.
[4] Does not include 10,500 limited-service men inducted during June and July.

From Lincoln, Ill.:

I have a son in France from whom we have not heard for over a month. We do not think so strangely of that, but he had not received a single word from home, though we have been writing him at least twice every week. The only son I have left will doubtless be going soon, and my son-in-law will be called in this month some time. I would be heartily ashamed of them if they were not serving the great cause at this time, but I know that nothing is more eagerly looked for by these brave lads than the letters from home. For the sake of our boys and the cause for which they are sacrificing, and for which we are all willing to sacrifice to the uttermost, do not let this matter drop. It is hurting all of us like a blow. Surely such conditions can be remedied.

From Chicago, Ill.:

There are thousands of fathers and mothers in this country whose sons are in France who have not heard from their boys for weeks owing to the poor mail service. We number our mail and find that my son gets very few of them, although correctly addressed.

From Massachusetts:

It is all true, sadly too true, that our boys do not get their mail promptly, if at all. It is the acme of cruelty to the boy and to the mother who has had to give him. Keep up the agitation with the hope of bettering conditions.

From Morgantown, W. Va.:

I have two sons in the Army. Members of my family have been writing letters to the boys, but have gotten no answers. What we can not understand is, Where does this undelivered mail go to? If not delivered, why does it not come back to the writer, as it is always sent in return envelopes?

From New York:

My son is very dutiful about writing me regularly, but my last letter from him is dated June 10, and in a letter written me in May he complained that he had not had a letter from me in six weeks, and I write him once a week regularly.

From New York City:

It seems about time something was done to make a change in this line. My sister has received no letter from her boy since June 2, and from May 1 up to this time he had received no letters whatsoever from home. She has written him three times a week regularly, and his young friend and I have written him twice a week.

From New York City again:

I have two sons over there. One of them received his training at Camp Lewis, where he went from California. He has been there three months, and I have received one letter from him though I am positive he has written regularly. Not one line in over two months, and I am nearly distracted, as no doubt he is, from a similar experience. With the other son it has been somewhat better, though it has been over a month now since I have heard from him, and I know he has written at least twice a week. I have given my sons freely to their country and do surely feel that this little satisfaction of communication is due me.

From Litchfield, Conn.:

I have two sons in France. It is nearly five weeks since letters have been received from them. I suppose it is the same with their letters from home. Everyone complains. They have a right to. Of course, we are willing to wait a reasonable time, but we feel that there is great inefficiency somewhere.

From Knoxville, Pa.:

The morale of the mothers of soldiers of our borough is being broken down on account of no communication being possible, and the War Department makes no effort to deliver or forward mail to the families of soldiers. Between May 15 and June 19 we had written about 20 letters to our son, but he had received none of them and stated that it had been more than a month since he had a letter from home, and it seemed like 10 years.

On Friday last, Mr. President, I had an experience of the time it takes to transmit mail from France. On that day I received letters from various correspondents there, and this is the time that those letters in my possession took in transit from their various points to the city of Washington, the Capital of this Nation:

1. Paris to Washington, June 28 to August 2.
2. G. H. Q. to Washington, June 30 to August 2.
3. Army post office 714 to Washington, June 29 to August 2.
4. Army post office 731 to Washington, June 28 to August 2.

In addition to this, I had with me Saturday a very distinguished citizen of California, Joseph Scott, who had returned from France the previous Wednesday, July 31. As we chatted on Saturday he told me that he had written me from Paris on the 8th day of July and again on the 10th of July. Neither letter had been received by me, and yet he had left Paris for New York on the 23d day of July and arrived in New York July 31, and was with me during all the day of August 3. Yesterday, August 4, after his departure, his two letters arrived.

There can not be any excuse in the world for that length of time in the transmission of letters from those specifically designated posts.

Now, in conclusion, let me read a portion of a letter from Otto Kahn, the banker of New York City, who has done such great patriotic work during this crisis of ours, and has recently returned from France. In an interview in the New York Times he adverted to this subject, and therefore I feel at liberty to read what he has written me. In a letter just received he says:

No one who has not been with our Army abroad can appreciate what it means to those splendid fellows, uncomplaining as they are under any and all unavoidable hardships and privations, to receive letters from home and to feel that their own letters reach their destination with reasonable promptness and regularity.

The ever-present feeling of the long distance separating them from home is perhaps the one which it is hardest for them to get accustomed to and to overcome. It has been made touchingly manifest to me in many instances. No remedy is more efficacious against what the Germans call "heimweh" (there is no equally descriptive word in the English language—the literal translation being "ache for home") than frequent and reasonably speedy intercourse by letter. Our boys are acting and behaving so magnificently that the very least we can do is to spare them avoidable hardships and heartburnings.

I ask the Members of the Senate to aid in sparing these boys in France additional hardships and heartburnings and to bring to them if we can, by united action, the letters that are written to them from those left at home, from their loved ones behind the line.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that I very heartily share in the desire of the Senator from California that the mail to our soldiers in France should be promptly delivered. I wish to inquire whether or not the Senator has investigated this matter so as to know how universal the delays have been; in other words, are the instances cited by the Senator from California unusual or is that the usual delay of the mail?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What I have cited is the usual thing, and I have taken these letters from various States to indicate and to demonstrate that fact. I may say, further, that I think probably every Senator with whom I have spoken on this subject is familiar with it and has met with exactly the same situation. I know, particularly, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] showed me various complaints he had. I know that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had letters of that sort. I know that is the personal experience of all of us, and on Thursday last I was speaking from my own personal experience.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I was led to make this inquiry from the fact that on the 1st of August I received a letter dated July 18 in France. It was from a private in the Infantry. I know of no reason why it should have received any unusual attention, and that instance prompted me to make the inquiry. The letter which I received on the 1st of August was dated the 18th of July, and if the letter of a private in the Infantry should have met with that speed I did not know whether the instances cited by the Senator from California were unusual or not. I am inclined to believe that there can not be the wholesale delay which the letters read by the Senator would seem to indicate. At any rate, I should like to have some information from the department as to the handling of the mail, the great quantity of it, and the delays in censorship and otherwise which might affect individual cases.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from California I want to make a brief statement.

Until about a month or so ago—I can not give the exact date—the distribution and handling of the mail over in France was under the charge of the Post Office Department. I get my information from an employee of the department who has been over there representing the Post Office Department. The handling and distribution of the mails over there is now under the charge of the War Department under the military forces. In other words, when letters are mailed from there or letters are received over there they are now handled by officers under the War Department.

I wish to say another thing in connection with this matter. Before the war mail boats would go to Europe in 5 or 6 days or, at the utmost, in 10 days. I do not know, but I take it that our boats carrying the mail must now go with a convoy, and that instead of making the trip as they did in normal times, in five or six days, it probably takes them two weeks, if not more. The ships that carry the mail are convoyed over there like the soldiers and the supplies we send there. That necessarily makes some delay. Instead of having our mail carried across the ocean as before the war in five or six days it may take from two to three weeks now.

Then, in addition to that, I wish to call attention to another fact. I get it from a young man who was my clerk here for a number of years, but he enlisted as a field clerk and went over there, and they put him in charge of the mail. He is not connected with that branch of the service any more, but he told me their postal facilities are just swamped over there by parcel-post matter; that people over here keep sending over there provisions, socks, and a lot of other things of which the soldiers have plenty and which they do not need; that they overload the mail with that stuff to the exclusion and to the detriment and delay of the letter mail.

I know from my experience how glad a soldier is to get letters from home, and I think all the friends of the soldiers in order to help this matter along about sending our mail over there ought to avoid sending parcel-post truck matter. Awhile ago I had a letter from a woman grumbling because under the new rule they had to get permission from the Export Board. She wanted to send stockings to her soldier boy there. I communicated with the Quartermaster General, and he said the Army was well supplied with stockings. So people here want to send other knicknacks in the way of food supplies. If the soldiers get their Regular Army rations there, which are now most generous, they do not need any of those things. So our people here can help in sending the mail over there rapidly by refusing to dump into the mail service of the United States an endless amount of parcel-post matter and confining it to letter mail.

Then there is another thing I want to call attention to. You must remember that our soldiers are scattered along a battle line of 150 miles on the eastern front, below Thul on the Swiss frontier, up to Verdun. Most of that line is occupied, and they are off west 100 miles on the battle line. Then our men are distributed in different parts along the line, and they move from one end of this extensive line to the other.

I know from my own experience in the Army how difficult we found it oftentimes to get our mail because we were, you might say, a movable column, one day here and a week hence at another place a hundred miles away from there. I know how difficult it was sometimes to have our mail follow us and reach us. I remember very well how we got along in those days. When we got into real war we did not have as much use for chaplains as we had in camp and cantonment, and so in order to make our chaplains useful, we made them postmasters of the regiment and had them distribute the mail.

I mention all these facts in order that Senators may see that we are now not in the midst of normal times. First, I want to cooperate with the Post Office Department and the military authorities by not dumping the mail full of all this class of parcel-post matter and by confining it as much as possible to letter mail and newspaper mail and other reading matter. These soldiers want letters and newspapers and magazines—reading matter.

Then, in the next place, we want to bear in mind that under military conditions over there and under conditions across the water a mail boat carrying United States mail can not make a trip as it did in normal times. That is necessary. I take it that our boats carrying the mail have to be convoyed like the boats that are carrying soldiers, and those boats, I presume, take more than two weeks, perhaps nearer three weeks, to make the trip across the ocean.

Then, in the next place, when the mails get over there it is not like coming here to the city of Washington, where the post office hands it to an army of carriers, and they have the street number and the street address and can distribute the mail immediately. When it goes over there the question is where is this company located, where is this regiment, where is this battalion, where is this division, and they must ascertain that. They are not located permanently in any one place, but from day to day the troops are shifting, and it takes time to ascertain where the troops are for the time being and to send them the mail.

I am not here to defend either the delinquencies of the Post Office Department or the delinquencies of that part of the Army that is now taking care of the mail over there. I am simply here to call the attention of Senators to the fact that under war conditions these matters are necessarily handicapped; that it is unavoidable; and that as individuals outside of the Post Office Department the greatest help that we can render is to cease loading up our mails for Europe with all kinds of parcel-post matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, just one word in response. The Senator from Minnesota is quite right that we all ought to do what we can and not load up the mail that goes to our boys in France with useless or even useful parcels that take time and carrying space and delay the transmission of mail, but I wish to say in response that the order was made three months ago prohibiting that very thing, and since three months ago that very thing has not been permitted by the Government. Since then no parcels can be sent except with a specific permission, which generally, so far as I am aware, has been refused.

I have spoken to little purpose if I did not make plain that the letters which came on Friday last came from Paris, from the general headquarters of the American Army in France, and that all of these that came to me took from 30 to 36 days to come across.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just a minute? I want to state to him that I have received within the last six months occasionally letters from our consul general of Rotterdam, a neutral country, and none of those letters have reached me in less than a month and most of them have been five and six week reaching me.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator adds an additional complaint against the Post Office Department with which I am not concerned. I am concerned alone with our boys in France. When these letters reached me, on Friday last, after 30 days or more in transmission from Paris, one from the General Headquarters of the American Army, I was asked by a certain distinguished gentleman, How does this compare with previous records? I said it compares favorably, because I got the letters; and I do not care if it takes 30 days or 36 days if I can get the letters; but the difficulty in France with our boys and the difficulty with us here is that they neither get our letters nor do we get their letters, except occasionally.

The experience of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] I think is the exception, which probably proves the rule. His letter undoubtedly came upon the same steamer which brought the letters to which I referred that came to me on Friday; and why it is that at the same time from an army in the field there should come to him a letter dated July 18, when from the General American Headquarters and from Paris there came to me letters dated in June is beyond my comprehension; and this probably presents one of the angles of the problem which we must all endeavor to solve.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I now desire briefly to discuss the Federal suffrage amendment, and I especially submit my observations to those of my fellow Senators who feel that they can not support the amendment because they consider that it violates what are said to be the fundamental rights of the States.

The peoples of the States created the American Constitution. Through that Constitution they established the Federal Government and clothed it with certain powers. They reserved to themselves the supreme power to alter or to abolish the Federal Constitution, to alter, extend, or abolish the powers of the Federal Government. If they had yielded in any degree this supreme power, they would have surrendered their collective sovereignty and overturned the foundation of their common freedom. The foundation of liberty is the power of the people to control and fashion the governments they create.

The preservation of popular rule is the issue at the heart of the conflict that now divides the world. The United States has entered that struggle because the principle of peoples' control has been everywhere imperiled. The basis of German imperialism lies in the fact that the German people may make no change in the German constitution unless the German Emperor agees that it shall be made. Thus he stands between the German people and the German constitution. And yet there are men in the United States Senate who say that they will not permit the American people to consider a change in the American Constitution, in the manner solemnly prescribed by them in that Constitution, unless these men first agree and believe that it should be made. Thus they hold in spirit and effect the same attitude toward the American Constitution and the American people as that occupied by the German Kaiser under the German system toward the German constitution and the German people.

The peoples of the States defined in the Constitution the manner in which they were to exercise the power of amendment. They ordained that this power should rest in a three-fourths majority of the States, acting through legislatures or conventions. Thus they denied to a single State, or to any number of States not exceeding one-fourth of all the States, the power to nullify the will of the remainder. They merged themselves into a combination of Commonwealths, a democracy of States, in which the will of three-fourths was to be the will of all, except solely as to the matter of equal representation in the Senate. It will be seen, therefore, that the States, acting in a body and functioning through a three-fourths vote, possess no higher right, no power more fundamental, than the right and power of molding the Federal Constitution. And yet certain Senators, in the name of State rights, are about to vote to deprive the States of the most sacred and most distinctive right they possess. To the States, as coequal units of an inseparable whole, acting through a three-fourths majority, belongs alone the right to say whether the Federal suffrage amendment shall become a part of the Constitution. The Senator who denies them that prerogative is a usurper of their functions and a despoiler of their rights.

A Senator who refuses to allow the States to consider a constitutional amendment not only violates their basic privilege, but also repudiates another right of most sacred quality, the right of petition. One of the pillars of human freedom is the right to appeal for redress of grievances to the tribunal having the power to grant relief. This right was guaranteed in the Magna Charta. It was reaffirmed in the articles of the Commons, in the case of the seven bishops, and in the Bill of Rights of 1689. Millions of people are asking Congress for the opportunity of petitioning the States, the only tribunal having authority to grant the desired relief, to adopt the Federal suffrage amendment. The Senator who refuses this prayer of millions of the American people ignores and violates one of their fundamental rights, namely, the right of petition.

Let me refer here to the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on the first nation-wide prohibition amendment nearly 40 years ago, introduced by Senator Blair, of New Hampshire. Senator George, of Mississippi, was a member of that committee, and no profounder student of the Constitution ever occupied a seat in the United States Senate. He was an unqualified antiprohibitionist. And yet, he and other antiprohibitionist members of the committee joined in a favorable report on the nation-wide prohibition amendment, a report which contains one of the clearest expositions of the amending clause in congressional annals. The report states that some of its signers would vote against the ratification of the amendment after its submission. The report states that the method provided by the Constitution for its own peaceful amendment would be destroyed by failure to submit.

The report states that refusal to submit would be a denial of the right of petition. It states that the changes in the Constitution made indispensable by the development of the Nation can only be peacefully accomplished by a judicious and liberal exercise of the power of Congress to propose amendments to the States upon the petition of those who desire to be heard in the great court of the people, exercising their sovereignty through the States as in the formation of the Constitution. The report adds that but for the belief in the conventions of the States that opportunity to amend the Constitution would be most liberally afforded by Congress in accordance with the forms provided in that instrument, the original ratification never would have been obtained.

Mr. President, if I were opposed to the Federal suffrage amendment on its merit I would nevertheless vote to submit it to the States in order that they might exercise their exclusive right to consider changes in the Constitution they created.

But Senators say that one State ought not to say what another State may do; that Texas, for instance, ought not to say what Maine may do. That is not the proposition involved in the Federal suffrage amendment. The proposal is that three-fourths or more of the States may say what all the States shall do in the matter of this amendment to the Federal Constitution.

John C. Calhoun, the chief apostle of State rights, said that the right of three-fourths of the States to bind all the States in amending the Constitution was in no way inconsistent with their sovereignty.

In his famous reply to Webster on February 26, 1833, he said:

> In connection with this point the Senator, to prove that the Constitution is not a compact, asserts that it is wholly independent of the State, and pointedly declares that the States have not a right to touch a hair of its head; and this with that provision in the Constitution that three-fourths of the States have a right to alter, change, amend, or even to abolish it staring him in the face.

Later, in the same address, he said:

> The plain state of the facts as regards our Government is that these States have agreed by compact to exercise their sovereign powers jointly, as already stated, and that for this purpose they have ratified the compact in their sovereign capacity, thereby making it the constitution of each State, in no wise distinguished from their own separate constitutions, but in the superadded obligation of compact—of faith mutually pledged to each other. In this compact they have stipulated, among other things, that it may be amended by three-fourths of the States—that is, they have conceded to each other by compact the right to add new powers or to subtract old by the consent of that proportion of the States without requiring, as otherwise would have been the case, the consent of all—a modification no more inconsistent with their sovereignty than any other contained in the compact. In fact, the provision to which I allude furnishes strong evidence that the sovereignty is, as I contend, in the States severally, as the amendments are effected not by any one three-fourths, but by any three-fourths of the States, indicating that the sovereignty is in each of the States.

Here let me say that the right on the part of three-fourths of the States to adopt amendments to the Federal Constitution was established by the votes of Southern States. While the convention of the States which framed the Constitution was in progress it was moved that three-fourths of the States be given the power to amend. A motion was made to strike out "three-fourths" in order that the consent of all the States might be necessary. The motion to strike out was rejected, every Southern State voting to reject. Then a motion was made that no State without its consent should be affected in its internal police, or in the matter of equal representation in the Senate. This motion was likewise rejected, every Southern State, except Delaware, voting to reject. Later a motion prevailed to the effect that no State without its consent should be deprived of equal representation in the Senate. It will be noted that without the votes of the Southern States the idea of three-fourths of the States controlling all in the matter of amendments to the Constitution would have been rejected and the United States would have been not an organic union but a loose alliance of independent countries, an alliance that would have broken under the first serious strain. Let nobody assert, therefore, that the adoption of the suffrage amendment would be contrary to the historic southern view of the Constitution.

Sir, there are numerous instances in the Constitution where the States in their collective creative capacity expressly prohibited a single State from doing certain things. The Constitution provides that no State shall have any other than a republican form of government; that no State shall make any treaty or alliance; that no State shall coin money or make anything except gold and silver coin a legal tender; that no State shall pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law or law impairing the obligation of contracts; that no State shall grant any title of nobility; that no State shall maintain the slave traffic; that no State shall abridge the privilege of any citizen of the United States or deny him the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the law. Is there anything revolutionary in saying that no State shall deny the right to vote on account of sex?

The issue embodied in the Federal suffrage amendment was not the constitutional issue of the American Civil War. At no time during the Civil War or during the controversies preceding that war was it ever seriously claimed by any appreciable number of people that slavery could not have been abolished by the orderly process of amending the Federal Constitution, if the votes of three-fourths of the States could have been secured for abolition. Nor will the laws of any State growing out of the race question be disturbed by the Federal suffrage amendment. These laws have no relation to the question of sex, and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court upholding their constitutionality would not be affected by the adoption of the suffrage amendment.

At this point let me submit two inquiries. With what consistency may we proclaim our devotion to the people's rule if we refuse to permit the American people to consider a change in their own organic law? With what consistency may we announce our love of freedom if we continue to deny political liberty to half our own population? Have not women earned the right to a place by the side of man in determining the policies of government? She is at his side on the battle fields of Europe. She is filling the places in industry left vacant by his departure for the front. In the vital task of conserving every resource of this Republic she is taking a vital part. Without her the war for democracy and humanity would long ago have been lost. Shall she have no voice in the Government she has saved? Her hand is skillful enough to wield the surgeon's knife. It is powerful enough to till the fields, to fashion guns and shells, to guide an ambulance or drive a truck. It is magical enough to soften agony, to soothe distress, to temper pain. Is it too feeble or too unworthy to hold the ballot?

> It doesn't unsex her to toil in a factory,
> Minding the looms from the dawn till the night;
> To deal with a school full of children refractory
> Doesn't unsex her in anyone's sight;
> Work in a store—where her back aches inhumanly—
> Doesn't unsex her at all, you will note;
> But think how exceedingly rough and unwomanly
> Woman would be if she happened to vote!
>
> To sweat in a laundry that's torrid and torrider
> Doesn't subtract from her womanly charm;
> And scrubbing the flags in an echoing corridor
> Doesn't unsex her—so where is the harm?
> It doesn't unsex her to nurse us with bravery,
> Loosing death's hand from its grip on the throat;
> But, ah, how the voices grow quivery, quavery,
> Wailing, "Alas, 'twill unsex her to vote!"
>
> She's feminine still when she juggles the crockery,
> Bringing you blithely the order you give;
> Toil in a sweatshop, where life is a mockery,
> Just for the pittance on which she can live—
> That doesn't seem to unsex her a particle.
> "Labor is noble"—so somebody wrote—
> But ballots are known as a dangerous article,
> Woman's unsexed if you give her the vote!

Nearly 30 years have passed since woman suffrage was first established in an American State. To-day she is voting in 19

States, which represent more than a third of the Electoral College, and in no jurisdiction where she has exercised suffrage any appreciable time has there been a serious suggestion of repeal. Woodrow Wilson, prophet and evangel of world democracy, has said that we should pass the Federal suffrage amendment as a duty to the women of America and of the world.

The United States Senate is on trial before the courts of all humanity. Will it refuse the American people, acting through the American States, acting through the channels they have themselves established, the right to mold their own Government? Will it prevent them, through a distorted and imperialistic conception of the mere function of submission, from considering the question of embodying in their own organic law a new charter of freedom, the extension of political liberty to millions of the human race? If so, then let it be said, in sorrow and humiliation, that in a land dedicated to democracy the American Senate has lifted, so far as this question is concerned, the black banner of a consummate despotism.

THE NATION'S DEBT TO LABOR.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, much has been said in both Houses of Congress lately and much has been written since this war began about the alleged unpatriotic attitude of labor toward the war. Whenever there is a strike we hear that all strikes ought to be prohibited by law regardless of the facts surrounding the strike; that all manual and skilled laborers ought to be banded into an industrial army by the Government and forced to work, and that anyone who strikes, whether in a just cause or not, should be placed up against a wall before a firing squad and shot; in other words, so far as labor is concerned, we ought to establish, contrary to our Constitution and laws, involuntary servitude in this country. I am opposed to these pernicious doctrines. We should not have strikes during this war. At the same time I am opposed to the conditions of labor and the scale of pay that produce strikes. When we do away with the evils of one we must in fairness do away with the injustice and oftentimes inhumanity of the other.

Of course there have been some strikes since the war began which perhaps ought not to have occurred. Perhaps there have been some statements from labor leaders which ought never to have been made; there are some organiaztions like the I. W. W. that ought to be effaced; but on behalf of American labor, both organized and unorganized, I want to say that, taken as a whole, no part of our citizenship has been more patriotic, more efficient in its efforts, or more effective in results in the prosecution of this war than has labor.

It is easy enough for those of us who do not labor with our hands to sit back and criticize. It is easy enough to abuse labor with our lips and besmirch it with our pens. But what are the fruits? The Saviour of mankind once said: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Let us measure the attitude of labor in this war by its fruits.

Take ships as an illustration. We are building to-day ships at the rate of perhaps 6,000,000 tons per year. Unless we did this we could not even take part in this war, for our atrocious enemy, by his savage use of his infamous and diabolical submarines, would soon have all our ships sunk. We are obliged to build ships faster than the enemy can sink them. We speakers, we Congressmen, we newspaper writers, we hired men in high places who spend the people's money as captains of industry exclaim at the top of our voices that we build those ships. What a travesty upon truth!

Labor builds those ships. It is labor that in sweat and grime and mud digs the raw materials from the bowels of the earth. It is labor that burns, toils, and sweats at the furnaces and at the forges to make these raw materials fit for service. It is labor that, with brawn and muscle and skill, fells the trees in the forest, turns them into logs and lumber, and finally manufactures them to fit them to become a part of the finished vessel. It is labor, skilled, patient, plodding, working day by day, that rivets and screws and nails and mortises the various parts and materials into a completed whole. Thus we see that the completed ship is the product of labor.

Ah, only those who know what it means to earn their bread by the sweat of their faces can know the hard and cruel grind on the lives and souls and bodies of those who actually do the toil. It is easy for a great captain of industry to say, when a ship is completed, "I have finished another ship." But such is not the fact. On the contrary, labor has finished that ship, and the smallest element of actual toil in it is that of the man who sometimes unthoughtedly says, "I built it." To labor is due 99 per cent of the completed result.

In mentioning captains of industry in this way I do not desire to minimize their services or reflect upon them. All honor to them for the good work they are doing. All honor to men of wealth and brains who are doing so much for our country in these days of her peril. But they ought not to claim all the credit. If they do their part well, then they are only doing the same thing that the laboring man is doing when he does his part well. The laborer is worthy of his hire. He is entitled to his share of praise for the splendid war work that is now being accomplished in our beloved country. It is not right to hold up labor as a body to scorn and contempt and criticism because some one or more of them do not do as we think is right any more than it would be to denounce all captains of industry and all men with money as thieves and robbers and for lack of patriotism because some of them are insolent and corrupt profiteers, robbing their Goverment right and left.

And as in the case of ships, so it is with practically all the rest of our war services and war activities. All our munitions of war—the bullets, the cannon, the shells, the guns, the machine guns, the rifles, the railroads, the rolling stock, the clothing, the uniforms, the cantonments, the war vessels, the food for our Armies and for our people—are manufactured or produced by the unremitting and patriotic toil of labor. The world can never know the weariness, the wear and tear on mind and soul and body, of the individuals composing labor who, hour by hour and day by day, in all kinds of weather, in heat and in cold, in rain and in snow, by their indefatigable efforts gather up all of these materials and make them ready for war service.

It is labor that fills our warehouses with food and raw materials of every description. It is labor that moves these materials over the railroads of the land. It is labor that unloads them from the railroad cars and reloads them on our ships. It is labor that takes care of them and handles them in their perilous journeys across the seas, that unloads them on the other side, and again reloads them in other cars made by labor. It is labor that transports them to the camps for our soldiers.

Ah, and more than that, when all this is done, it is labor's sons, in the largest degree, who actually use these materials on the field of battle. It is labor's sons who bear the brunt of the fight.

We constantly hear criticisms that we have to pay labor too much, that the demands of labor are extortionate, and that the Government ought to fix the price of labor. The war has raised the price of everything several fold. Why should any man begrudge the poor man, who labors with his hands, a corresponding increase in price of his daily toil? If he should not receive a great increase in his wages he could not, under present prices, even feed himself, much less feed his family and clothe and educate his children. The war has brought untold profits to the manufacturers, to those engaged in trade and commerce, and even to those engaged in production. Why should any man begrudge prosperity to the laboring man, who brings about prosperity for all others?

A gentleman came into my office the other day and said that Congress ought to take steps at once to regulate the price of labor. As an argument against the alleged awful present conditions as to labor, he said he was passing through North Carolina on his way up and had pointed out to him a 14 or 15 year old girl, with hair hanging down her back, who was actually making $25 a week in a cotton factory, where ordinarily a child of that kind could be employed at $3 or $4 a week. I asked if she was not a skilled laborer. He said, yes, he had been told that she had the nimblest fingers that were known in that factory; that she had tremendous powers of concentration; she had great physical endurance, and was possessed of a fine character. But during this time of our country's troubles that while she was using all to the uttermost yet she was making for herself $25 a week. She was profiteering! My friend did not seem to be struck with the fact that a young girl was at work in that factory when she ought to have been going to school. His astonishment came from her being permitted to earn so large a wage. What an awful catastrophe—a little girl making $25 a week in war times in the dust and dirt of a cotton factory! Indeed, it might be true that her employer was making $2 where the child made $1 out of her own labor, but the child ought to be forbidden by law to receive so large a wage. There is no limit fixed by law on the profits of her employer, but Congress should legislate a limit to her wage, and thereby her employer could receive more. I subscribe to no such doctrine. No doubt a child of such tender years should be prohibited from working in that factory at all. But if she is permitted to work there and can earn $25 a week at it I am proud of her, and proud of conditions which have brought about the payment of such a wage. All honor to that splendid American child, and may her wage increase.

I thank God that this war has—awful as it is—at least given some of those who toil an opportunity to better their condition. There may be individual instances of shortcomings and failures, but as a whole labor is doing its full part by this war. I am proud that, under this Democratic administration, labor is not being crowned with thorns nor crucified on a cross of gold. I take pride in the fact that it is bravely in every avenue of trade and commerce, of industry and productiton, fighting the battles of our common country just as its sons, in tremendous numbers, are fighting our battles on the bloody fields of France. Instead of criticizing, instead of abusing it, we ought to reach out a helping hand to it and lift it upward and onward to higher, better, and nobler things, thanking God that in this time of America's troubles we have a system of labor that has accomplished so much. Let us be fair to the men who labor with their hands and commend them for the good they are doing. Before it is over there will be glory enough in this war for all patriotic Americans of high and low degree.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I appreciate the eloquent speech of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], in which he points to the fact that the laboring men of our country are honorably bearing a conspicuous part in sending men and material to the front.

The newspapers for the past week or two have brought us news of a most encouraging nature. The events of the past three days have brought immortal renown to our arms. Imperishable glory will rest upon American arms for victories that valorous American troops have won already. A new luster, if luster indeed could be added, has been placed upon American traditions of courage, and it must not be forgotten that a large proportion of these men are men who were taken from the ranks of labor, and they are fighting cheerfully and with a bravery beyond the range of eulogy in defense of civilization.

I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a minute while I read an editorial from the Washington Post, of this city, entitled "America's unfolding power." I can not refrain at this time from recalling the jeremiads that were chanted so inveterately in this Chamber in the weary days of last winter when icicles were hanging on the walls, and many doleful and lugubrious voices here stated that the Secretary of War was not speeding the work, that there was inefficiency in the War Department.

The repulse of our enemy is a sufficient answer as to whether or not there is inefficiency.

Results alone are all that can speak or ought to speak.

This editorial was published on Sunday, August 4, 1918, in the Washington Post:

AMERICA'S UNFOLDING POWER.

Honest criticism necessarily becomes praise in view of the remarkable achievements of the War Department under Secretary Baker. No American who is whole-heartedly praying for the success of American arms, and who is therefore eager to cooperate with all other Americans imbued with the same spirit, can fail to give full credit to Secretary Baker for what he has accomplished. He was under the fire of criticism not many months ago. He met the attack good-naturedly, dealt with his critics fairly and patiently, and profited by many of the suggestions that were brought out. In the meantime he continued the development of the plans for the Army, the details of which he could not disclose to the public, because that would have meant disclosing them to the enemy.

These plans are now in process of execution. They are magnificent. That is, they are proportionate to the strength of this Nation, unhesitating in their recognition of unwelcome problems and adequate in their solution of them, and commensurate with the needs of the tremendous emergency that confronts the country. No incompetent Secretary of War could have shaped and perfected such plans as these. The responsibility involved in actually approving the plans and directing their execution would have appalled a timid or weak executive. Mr. Baker has given proof that he possesses the qualities most requisite in a Secretary of War, and only persistent ignorance or malice would deny him the credit that belongs to his achievements.

It now appears that Gen. Pershing has under his own command 1,000,000 men, apart from the American forces brigaded with the British Army. Eight American divisions, commanded by American officers, are operating in the present battle area. Little wonder that the Germans lost heart, after sending their choicest troops to punish the Americans, only to see them fall before the men from the New World. If the first million Americans can thus hearten the entire allied army and turn a German offensive into a defeat, what will additional millions do?

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the glorious deeds of the Americans at the front. Are not these deeds already a part of the immortal fame that illumines the names of all those allied soldiers, living and dead, who have marched to the music of liberty and fought for their fellow men? America is proud as the passing days unroll a record of the heroism of her lads, worthy to be placed on the same page with the marvelous devotion of the soldiers of France, the British Empire, and Italy.

It is to support and make most effective the devotion of the boys at the front that Americans must bend every muscle and turn every thought. The center of all responsibility and the fountain of all activity is the President of the United States. He has grown greater as his responsibilities have increased, until he towers among men as the chief figure in the alliance of civilized nations. Through his will and capacity the Nation has seen the United States Army expand from a Mexican border column into a steel-hard machine capable of cracking the shining armor of Germany. The work is still in progress. It needs the cooperation of every American in some capacity. The President and the Secretary of War have a right to ask the help and sympathy of every individual citizen, without regard to politics, business, or location.

The President and the Secretary of War are the home directors and managers of the strong and rapidly growing Army at the front. The most practical manner in which any citizen can express his enthusiasm over American achievements and his praise of American valor is to assist President Wilson and Secretary Baker by every means that comes to hand. Let the army at home be as sternly bent upon victory or death as the boys at the front. Let the country tune its heartbeats to the pulsations that surge through the hearts of our boys in France. Let the sympathy of the people be made palpable to the President and his advisers, so that they shall feel behind every act the irresistible and fatal power of this Nation.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on Thursday last I was making some remarks regarding the coal situation when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived, and the Senate necessarily adjourned. I have felt that it would not be out of place to make a further brief statement regarding the coal situation in the country. We all realize, of course, that carrying on the war successfully depends in a great measure upon the production of coal. As best indicating the increased necessities for the production of coal, we can refer to the production which existed in this country prior to the beginning of the war in Europe and the estimated necessities of the country at the present time.

The coal production of the country should be considered with reference to anthracite and bituminous separately. Anthracite coal is, of course, used principally in domestic consumption. Prior to the war the annual consumption of anthracite was about eighty-two or eight-three million tons per annum. That has been increased during the late period of the war to about 100,000,000 tons. That increase in the output of anthracite coal for domestic uses has been occasioned largely by the influx of population into the congested centers of the Northeast and of the Middle Atlantic States where the industries engaged in producing for the war are more numerous.

The increase of population of the New England and Middle Atlantic States by reason of the war, it has been estimated, is nearly five million people, and, of course, that additional population must be kept warm. The means of keeping warm is principally by the use of anthracite coal. So the output of anthracite coal for those purposes has necessarily increased, and the anthracite mines are working practically at their full capacity. The result is that this year it is planned for New England to get about 17 per cent more anthracite coal than she did last year or the year before, and the Middle Atlantic States about 13 per cent more. In order to make up this additional amount for these particular sections of the country, it has been necessary to curtail the use of anthracite in the Middle West and in sections where bituminous coal is readily available.

This amount of anthracite, which has been increased from about 82,000,000 tons to 100,000,000 tons, has been produced with a very much less number of laborers than in former years. In 1915 the number of laborers in the anthracite mines of the country was about 176,000. At the present time, with an output nearly 25 per cent greater, the number of laborers is only about 145,000, indicating, of course, the patriotism of the laboring men of this country in the anthracite mines. They do not have the number of holidays now that they had. They work more hours a day. The output per man is much greater. I think the country owes a feeling of gratitude to the laborers of the country who are working in the anthracite mines, and what I have said in regard to the anthracite mines is true, relatively speaking, with respect to bituminous mines.

So it seems to me that the anthracite situation is being reasonably cared for. It is true that some anthracite is used in production, but comparatively little more would be used if they had it. For that reason it is important that everybody should be concerned in saving anthracite wherever it is possible, because every ton saved means that many tons less necessary to be mined and that many tons less necessary to be shipped.

In conserving the use of coal you conserve the labor in the mine and you conserve the labor and expense of transportation, and enable that energy to go into the lines of activity necessary to carry on the war.

With respect to the bituminous coal situation, prior to the European war for some few years the consumption of bituminous coal was practically stabilized around about 450,000,000 tons a year. In 1916 the production of bituminous coal was about 502,000,000 tons. The next year, while the estimated demand was for about 600,000,000 tons, the actual output was 554,000,000 tons, showing an increase last year of bituminous coal of more than 50,000,000 tons.

As indicating the increasing necessities of the country, the estimated requirements of the country of bituminous coal for the current coal year, extending from April 1 of this year to April 1 of next year, are 635,000,000 tons, showing the enormous expanse of the industries of the country which are using bituminous coal. It is an index of the extent to which we are putting our energy into the war, the increased activities of the country.

Every ship that is constructed at the shipyards requires 5 tons of coal for 1 ton of ship, and when we are increasing our merchant marine and our war vessels we must necessarily increase the quantity of coal. So the country is increasing its demand, and the output of coal, I may say, is increasing to meet those demands.

It is true that there is an appeal being made to the country to conserve the use of coal. Thousands and thousands of tons are wasted in the 250,000 boilers of the country because of the unskilled way in which it is fed into the furnaces and because of the poorly constructed furnaces themselves. Other thousands of tons are wasted in the way that the coal is consumed in the homes or in the heating appliances of the country. So it is necessary to conserve the use of coal wherever it can be done, and the Fuel Administration is appealing to the country to conserve the use of coal so that there may be beyond peradventure an ample supply for the industries which are making an output for the conduct of the war. As I have already said with reference to anthracite, whenever you save any coal in the home or any coal in the furnace you save the labor and the transportation for other necessary purposes.

Of course, as we all know from statements in the papers of the country, coal is being conserved by taking it away from what may be designated nonessential industries. The quantity of coal allotted to breweries has been decreased materially. The quantity of coal for other purposes of a similar nature, or even of a less essential character in the opinion of some, has extended throughout the country, and every effort is being made to conserve the use of bituminous coal. But assuming the necessities for bituminous coal during this coal year to be 635,000,000 tons, I want to give some ray of hope to the consumers of the country that they may reasonably expect to have a reasonable supply for use in a reasonable way.

In April, 1918, the bituminous coal mines produced about 43,023,000 tons as against 42,300,000 tons in April of last year. In May the production was 46,890,000 as against 47,551,000 in May, 1917. In June, 1918, the production was 60,117,000 as against 47,753,000 in June, 1917. The total production for the first 13 weeks of the coal year ended June 29, 1918, was 150,030,000. The same period in 1917 produced only 137,307,000. In June, 1918, bituminous coal production first reached the high weekly average of 12,500,000. But this record was promptly upset in the week of July 13, when the bituminous coal mines turned out 13,243,000 net tons.

This weekly production was approximately 1,031,000 net tons, or 8 per cent, above the average weekly requirements of 12,211,500, which the Fuel Administration has estimated as necessary to satisfy this year's war demand. However, the average weekly production for the coal year to July 13 is estimated at 11,568,000 net tons, or 5.3 per cent behind the weekly requirements. In order to make up the deficit it will be necessary to have approximately 10 more weeks of production equivalent to that of July 13, or a production of 12,472,000 net tons during each of the 37 remaining weeks in the coal year ending March 31, 1919. At the end of the week ended July 20 production for the year was 8,912,500 tons behind the requirements.

These figures, it seems to me, demonstrate that the production of coal is practically reaching the point where it can be said that the actual requirements of the country are being met. The question of domestic supply, in my opinion, is cared for, and the only difficulty which can possibly arise may come from the fact that some of the nonessential industries of the country will not be permitted to get all the coal which they would like to have. The domestic consumption of the country, it seems to me, is well in hand, and it also appears that the manufacturing interests of the country which are necessary at this time are likewise well in hand.

Judging from some remarks which have been made on the floor of the Senate it seems that the method of mining the coal and transporting it is not universally understood. It is almost the invariable custom in the business of coal mining to load the coal directly from the mine upon the railroad car. Places for the storage of mined coal are not provided, and, except in rare instances, can not be provided. It thus becomes evident that the output of coal depends upon the transportation provided, transportation being the measure of the output from the mine. All that I have previously said as to the increased output of coal indicates in a relative degree the increased transportation provided by the railroads of the country. This remarkable showing as to increased delivery of coal by the railroads indicates that the railroad situation with reference to coal is likewise well in hand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed and the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock on Thursday next.

Thereupon the Senate (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Thursday, August 8, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 5, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts unto Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, source of all our strength, courage, wisdom, and purity. Impart unto us, we beseech Thee, of these gifts sufficient unto our daily needs, that with all diligence and perseverance we may do whatsoever our hand findeth to do, with unswerving fidelity to truth and justice.

We bless Thee for the victory of our arms in the great battle upon which the eyes of the world are centered. May it be followed up with greater victories, that the enemies of civilization may be driven back from the lands they have sought to destroy, that final victory may come and peace be restored to a sorrowing world; and all glory and honor be Thine, in the Name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 1, 1918, was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE ON THURSDAY NEXT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to act as Speaker pro tempore on Thursday next.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Thursday.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, August 8, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 12731) amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of R. E. Willson and 38 other residents of Oakland County, Mich., indorsing House bill 10266, a bill to provide for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers in order to relieve those who object on conscientious grounds to the oath prescribed by law for officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of citizens of Long Beach, Cal., asking repeal of magazine zone postal rates as enacted in the revenue law of 1917; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 8, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast placed in large measure the responsibility for the happiness and freedom and peace of the world in our hands. The course of civilization for many generations may depend upon the fidelity with which we perform the tremendous task that now challenges us in the world field, and we turn to Thee at the beginning of this day for inspiration and knowledge and grace, that we may justify our place of leadership in the sight of God and of men, and may perform our task under the guidance and the blessing of God. To this end we pray Thee to guide us this day in the discharge of every duty, and may it all be done for Thy glory. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
August 8, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I present a memorial of citizens of the town of Chehalis, Wash., asking that some adequate means be devised by the Federal Government for dealing with those citizens who refuse to assist and so in a passive way oppose the conduct of the war as to subscriptions for liberty bonds and other necessary war measures. It is a very excellent memorial, and I ask that it be filed and preserved in the archives of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I also present a petition from a large number of citizens of Spokane, Wash., praying the Government to establish certain military ranks for nurses who are serving in the Army of the United States or in hospitals maintained by the Army of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Mrs. Mittie C. Hubbard, of Mankato, Minn., remonstrating against a tax on musical instruments, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Minnesota, relative to tax exemption of farm-loan bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHAFROTH introduced a bill (S. 4860) granting an increase of pension to Francis S. Prouty; to the Committee on Pensions.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, several days ago there occurred here in the city what seems to me was an unseemly protest on the part of the organization known as the National Woman's Party. In this protest, published on their banners and exhibited in one of our parks, it is said:

We protest against the continued disfranchisement of American women, for which the President of the United States is responsible.

We deplore the weakness of the President in permitting the Senate to line itself with the Prussian Reichstag by denying democracy to the people.

Mr. President, this criticism of the President is so unfair and unjust and untrue that I think it ought to be condemned by everyone. I am, as everyone knows, a strong advocate of woman suffrage. I voted for the national amendment while I was a Member of the House. I believe in it thoroughly. I am going to vote for it again when it comes up in the Senate. This kind of criticism coming from any body of our women seems to me to be very hurtful, indeed, to the cause of suffrage. It is an uncalled-for and wanton insult to the man who is doing more for the suffrage amendment than perhaps anyone else in this country.

It will be recalled that as early as June 7 last the President wrote a very strong letter to Mrs. Catt, of the woman suffrage party, in which he set out fully his views and his attitude on this question and his very favorable attitude on the question. Later on in a letter addressed to my colleague, Senator SHIELDS, which has been published in all the papers, he reiterated and reaffirmed his advocacy of the pending suffrage amendment. Even later than that he wrote a letter to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and put the question again strongly before that Senator and before the American people. That letter, as well as the others, perhaps was published about the time it was written.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I trust the Senator does not confuse the organization, of which Mrs. Catt is president, with the outfit which had one of its periodic outbreaks on the streets a few days ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not at all, but I merely mentioned the fact that the President wrote to Mrs. Catt, a distinguished suffragist, and if my language bore the meaning to the Senator he suggests I want to change it.

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely mentioned it because the letter of the President of June 7, 1918, was written to Mrs. Catt.

Mr. THOMAS. No; it did not convey that impression to me. My reason for interrupting the Senator was that I thought possibly those reading the Senator's remarks would confuse the regular organization, which has represented the cause of woman suffrage and represented it ably and sanely and well for a great many years, with this so-called National Woman's Party, the principal object of whose officials in my judgment is to seek the notoriety given to their actions by the press and sometimes by ourselves in outlining and discussing it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the distinguished Senator for calling my attention to the difference, in which opinion and statement I agree heartily. I think we all understand that the organizations are entirely separate and that a very great difference exists between the purposes of the two organizations.

Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD the correspondence between the President and Senator SHIELDS, and between the President and Senator BAIRD, as published in the papers, and I also ask that the editorial in the Washington Post of to-day entitled "Suffrage militant" be printed in the RECORD. This Post editorial so aptly puts the case and so truthfully states the facts as I understand them to be that I trust Senators will not object to its going into the RECORD. I think it is nothing but fair to the President of the United States that these facts be put in the RECORD, so that they can not be misunderstood or misinterpreted or falsified.

These representatives of the National Woman's Party are simply allowing their zeal to overcome their judgment. They know perfectly well that the President is sincerely desirous of seeing the amendment adopted and is exerting the power of his great influence in every proper way to that end. If they do not know that these statements on their banners about the President are untrue, then those who are responsible for their being in Washington ought to discharge them for ignorance. Everybody else knows it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that I think the President's letter to Senator SHIELDS and also his letter to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] have already been printed in the RECORD. Therefore I must object to their going in again.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not object to the editorial in the Post.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will permit me just a word——

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I, like the Senator from Tennessee, am heartily in favor of woman suffrage and have so expressed myself many times on the floor of the Senate, but I really can not approve of many of the demonstrations made in the past or the one made day before yesterday by the members of the National Woman's Party. I think the Senator in making the request is magnifying this whole unfortunate occurrence. I do not believe Tuesday's demonstration would have taken place if the papers would ignore such actions. I believe, with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that the principal object of these demonstrations is to get publicity. I want to say to those good women that they are not advancing the cause of woman suffrage one iota, but in my opinion such actions as have taken place in the past have proven positively harmful.

I have tried to harmonize their actions with their seeming desire for early action on the resolution, and from my point of view it seems to me that there can be but one of two conclusions: Either the securing of the object referred to by the Senator from Colorado or they are not prepared for the passage of the resolution for some unknown reason.

I hope, Mr. President, these un-American demonstrations will cease, for the American people are not convinced of the righteousness of any cause by any such actions. I am ready at any time to do all in my power to bring the suffrage resolution to a vote in the Senate, and I also say that I do not believe that such actions as have taken place in the past will gain one single, solitary vote, and, if I am to judge, they will affect adversely the final result. I mean any action which will bring an early vote and a successful vote for the resolution.

Therefore I ask the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw the request for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will accept the Senator's suggestion so far as the publication of the correspondence with Senators if it has already been put in the RECORD, but I hope he will withdraw his objection so far as this editorial is concerned and let it go in, because it very aptly details just exactly what the Senator and I agree are the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object if the Senator puts in the editorial as a part of his remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to do so.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 8, 1918.]

SUFFRAGE MILITANT.

If there is one man in public life who is sincerely in favor of universal suffrage, that man is the President of the United States. From the first he has been an advocate of woman suffrage, but he looked upon it as a State issue, and not one to be treated nationally. He showed his interest in the subject a few years ago by journeying to Princeton to vote for a suffrage amendment to the New Jersey constitution.

Recently, however, the President has taken a broader view of the subject and has come over to open advocacy of the national suffrage amendment. His active interest has taken form in letters written to Senators urging them to vote for the amendment and stating, as his opinion, that national woman suffrage should be adopted now as a war measure. With a full knowledge of the President's active support of their cause, the National Woman's Party inaugurated its campaign on Tuesday for the adoption of the suffrage amendment with a demonstration in Lafayette Square, in which there was borne a banner with this strange device:

"We protest against the continued disfranchisement of American women, for which the President of the United States is responsible.

"We deplore the weakness of the President in permitting the Senate to line itself with the Prussian Reichstag by denying democracy to the people."

Of course, the bearers of these banners were arrested and the meeting was dispersed, although the suffragists announce that the demonstrations are to be repeated. Perhaps it was the intense heat which served to warp the judgment of the enthusiastic suffragists who publicly denounced the President as the cause of the Senate's failure to pass the suffrage amendment. But whatever the motive, it will be difficult for them to convince the public that they have any ground for complaint against the President, when all who read the public prints are aware that he has been openly proselyting among Republican as well as Democratic Senators in favor of the legislation desired.

Last winter when the suffragists inaugurated their picketing campaign at the White House—a campaign which eventually involved arrests, prison sentences, hunger strikes, and other hysterical incidents—there were many neutrals on suffrage who contended that the women were doing the cause more harm than good. But suffrage gained strength in spite of these demonstrations. The President, who had more ground for personal complaint than anyone else, because his official home was made the storm center, declined to be prejudiced by the activities of the militants and came out openly for the Federal amendment. The impression was general among Senators and Representatives that the proposed legislation passed the House on its merits and that no vote for it was won by spectacular methods.

National woman suffrage is now on the verge of being submitted to the States for incorporation in the Federal Constitution. What the cause needs is support which will appeal to the minds of Senators who are wavering so that they may be influenced to change their views. Such arguments will not come out of unlawful assemblages or attacks upon the Chief Executive of the Nation.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, since the colloquy between Senator SMOOT and me about the correspondence between the President and Senators SHIELDS and BAIRD, Mr. Halsey has made an investigation of the RECORD and finds that the correspondence has not been heretofore put in the RECORD. I have seen Senator SMOOT and told him of this fact, and he does not now object to that correspondence being printed also. I therefore insert it into the RECORD. It is as follows, as shown in the Evening Star of July 30:

PRESIDENT URGES WOMAN SUFFRAGE—BELIEVES ACTION ON PENDING AMENDMENT WILL HAVE BEARING ON WAR—WRITES SENATOR SHIELDS.

[By David Lawrence.]

President Wilson is a very busy man and has a great many problems to decide every day, and for a long time nothing except matters vitally related to the conduct of the war have occupied his mind, so it is significant to note the connection which President Wilson openly declares that he sees between the morale of the American people, their sincere adherence to democratic principles, and the passage by the United States Senate of the Federal amendment to enfranchise women of this country.

The President does not share the view that woman suffrage is irrelevant and extraneous at this critical period of our history, but takes the time to point out that America will make effective war only when she has been inspired by such reforms as he thinks are involved in the giving of the ballot to the women of the United States. Incidentally, the President shows how earnestly he desires victory in this war, for he says, "We can win if we have the will to win."

EXPRESSES VIEWS TO SENATOR.

The President wrote his views in a letter to Senator SHIELDS, of Tennessee, who replied, giving his sincere objections, but the President sent the Tennessee Senator a second letter, and the whole correspondence, which is given below, reflects the whole-hearted and persistent interest which Mr. Wilson is showing in the fight for woman suffrage. Whatever doubts even the prosuffrage advocates may have had before as to the extent of Mr. Wilson's enthusiasm for their cause are now dispelled by the forcefulness of the President's language. The correspondence, which is made public by Senator SHIELDS, with the permission of the White House, follows:

PRESIDENT'S FIRST LETTER.

The President's first letter to Senator SHIELDS:

"THE WHITE HOUSE,
"WASHINGTON.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: I feel so deeply the possibilities latent in the vote which is presently to be taken in the Senate that I am taking a step which in ordinary circumstances I would not feel justified in taking and ask you very frankly if it will not be possible for you to vote for the amendment. I feel that much of the morale of this country and of the world will repose in our sincere adherence to democratic principles—will depend upon the action which the Senate takes in this now critically important matter. If it were merely a domestic question, or if the times were normal, I would not feel that I could make a direct request of this sort, but the times are far from normal, the fortunes of nations are so linked together, the reactions upon the thought of the world are so sharp and involve such momentous issues, that I know that you will indulge my unusual course of action and permit me to beg very earnestly that you will lend your aid in clearing away the difficulties which undoubtedly beset us if the amendment is not adopted.

"With much respect, sincerely, yours, WOODROW WILSON."

SENATOR SHIELDS'S RESPONSE.

To this letter Senator SHIELDS replied:

"UNITED STATES SENATE,
"WASHINGTON.

"MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Your valued letter concerning the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution favoring equal suffrage, now pending in the United States Senate, has challenged my most thoughtful consideration, as do all your views upon public matters. The resolution involves fundamental questions affecting the sovereignty and powers of the Federal and State Governments, most important and vital to the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent in the United States Senate, and those of States with which they are closely allied in all social, economical, and governmental interests, upon which I have most profound convictions unfavorable to it, known and, I believe, approved by the great majority of the people of Tennessee—arrived at after full consideration of conditions existing when I voted against a similar one some years ago and those now confronting our country. The reasons for my conclusions are those controlling the majority of my colleagues from the Southern States, well known to you, and which would not be interesting to here restate.

NOT REGARDED AS WAR ISSUE.

"If I could bring myself to believe that the adoption of the resolution would contribute to the successful prosecution of the war we are now waging with Germany, I would unhesitatingly vote for it, because my whole heart and soul is involved in bringing it to a victorious issue, and I am willing to sacrifice everything save the honor and freedom of our country in aiding you to accomplish that end. But I have been unable to do so. We can not reasonably expect the proposed amendment to be ratified within less than two years and the discussion of it would unquestionably divert the minds and energies of the people from the one great absorbing subject before us—the winning of the war—by involving those of many States in a most bitter controversy contrary to our earnest desire for that unity of thought and action of the American people now so imperatively required.

"These are my sincere convictions, but out of my very high respect for your views I will continue to give your suggestions my most thoughtful and earnest consideration.

"With the highest respect, I am, sincerely, yours.

"JOHN K. SHIELDS."

REITERATES HIS VIEWS.

On receipt of the above letter President Wilson wrote the following:

"THE WHITE HOUSE,
"WASHINGTON.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: Thank you very sincerely for your frank letter of yesterday about the suffrage amendment. I realize the weight of argument that has controlled your attitude in the matter, and I would not have written as I did if I had not thought that the passage of the amendment at this time was an essential psychological element in the conduct of the war for democracy. I am led by a single sentence in your letter, therefore, to write to say that I do earnestly believe that our action upon this amendment will have an important and immediate influence upon the whole atmosphere and morale of the nations engaged in the war, and every day I am coming to see how supremely important that side of the whole thing is. We can win if we have the will to win.

"Cordially and sincerely, yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

WOMEN PLEAD WITH SENATOR.

Although the above correspondence took place in the early part of June of this year, the publication of the letters has not been possible until this time. The women leaders lack only one or two votes of the necessary two-thirds of the Senate and are making a hard fight to persuade Senator SHIELDS to follow the wishes of the President. The Tennessee Senator is up for reelection this fall, and some of his opponents have declared for suffrage. Mr. SHIELDS has given no indication as to what his vote finally will be. There are other Senators whose opinions are not known, and as soon as the Senate reconvenes there will be prompt pressure for a vote so that there may be a counting of noses. Every day, in the opinion of the woman-suffrage supporters, brings the Federal amendment nearer to adoption, as they see a universal reaction due to woman war service and other factors which will help create a public opinion to insure the needed votes for the amendment.

I can not find the letter to Senator BAIRD, though I have seen it in some newspaper. However, the following article from the Washington Times shows it was written:

PRESIDENT URGES SENATORS TO ACT ON SUFFRAGE PLAN.

Another determined effort is to be made to get the Senate to act favorably on the woman's suffrage amendment. It developed to-day that in addition to Senator SHIELDS, President Wilson has written letters to other Senators asking them to reverse their position and to vote to submit the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the people.

According to information at the Capitol, the President has written to Senator DAVID BAIRD, of his home State, New Jersey, asking that he support the amendment. It is understood to be the position of the administration that, inasmuch as Senator William Hughes, whose death caused the vacancy to which Senator BAIRD was named, was an enthusiastic advocate of suffrage, the incumbent Senator should support the amendment.

Other Southern Senators besides Senator SHIELDS were reported to have been urged by the President to support suffrage when the Senate returns and gets down to business.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should perhaps say nothing further on the subject which the Senator from Tennessee has brought to the attention of the Senate. Indeed, I fully share the view of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that if the press of the country would ignore these sporadic outbreaks of misdirected enthusiasm there would be a complete abandonment of the so-called policy of direct action in a movement which is of nation-wide importance. But as I am given to plainness of speech, let me say, Mr. President, personally I am growing weary of these outbreaks. I have been an advocate of woman suffrage for the last quarter of a century, and I took some active part in the campaign which led to its adoption 25 years ago by the State which I partly represent. Ever since that time I have consistently and constantly advocated the extension of suffrage to the women of the country. But if this picketing propaganda is to be revived, it may cause some of us—though, of course, I am only speaking for myself—to reconsider our declared attitude concerning this amendment, a result which I am sure these women do not desire. Those of us who feel as I do—and I do not think I am alone—owe it to ourselves and to the public to sound a warning that the success of the amendment may be imperiled by a revival of this practice by the aroused antagonism of men who now are and have been among its advocates and supporters.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, "here endeth the first lesson." What a singular thing it is to find two advocates of a cause praying that the newspapers will not mention the conduct of the leaders of the cause!

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. The people whom the Senator from Utah and I have criticized are not the leaders of the movement. They are its noisy advocates.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if they are not the leaders it would be difficult to determine who are the leaders. To conclude the sentence I was uttering, it is a singular thing to find distinguished Senators who advocate the cause of woman's suffrage practically declaring that the only way to keep the advocates of the cause from disgusting the American people and alienating their support is by concealing from the people what in fact these leaders are doing.

The conduct referred to being that of some ladies who insisted upon holding a public meeting in one of the parks without permission of the authorities, this particular act was, in my opinion, the most innocuous and inoffensive of all their performances in the vicinity of the White House. Truth to tell, I think there was very little occasion for the arrest of these women. Of course no woman is to be expected to conform to the laws that mere men must obey. That is an understood thing. [Laughter.] As a corollary of that proposition we have heretofore said that she should not have imposed upon her certain obligations that men must assume. We have never undertaken to say that women should be drafted into the Army or compelled to serve in the Navy. The reason why we have not done so is because there is an essential difference between men and women. We have also held that it is not the business of any woman to support any man; on the other hand, we have declared that it is the business of each man to support some good woman. They do not all perform this function, but the percentage who do not look after some woman and support her, in whole or in part, is very small. The vast majority of the men of the world are taking care of some good women. Those failing to do so, with the exception of one or two distinguished Senators, do not represent the best of mankind. [Laughter.]

We demand that if a man and woman out walking together are assailed by a highwayman that the man will, if necessary, die in the protection of the woman. Sometimes the man proves a coward, but in that case the world regards him as a degenerate wretch. We expect if a burglar breaks into a house at night that the woman will do the screaming and the man will do the fighting. Just in proportion as each of them lives up to the rule, they conform to the laws of nature. [Laughter.]

There are some things we expect of the women that are not demanded of men, and, thank God, they have performed those duties through all the ages with a fidelity and devotion that is sublime beyond description. But they are the duties of the women. They have kept the home. There are some women today who think that that is an ignoble calling. Just in proportion as there are such women the demonstration is the more complete that those women at least never ought to be permitted to vote. The woman who thinks that the keeping of the home is beneath her and beneath her sex is not fit to vote and is not fit for anything else. It is the noblest attribute of humanity. The mothers who bore us are to-day the highest ideals of our souls.

There are some differences between men and women that were ordained by the Almighty and that all the cranks and agitators of earth can never remove. This is true whether the agitator appears in the form of a petticoat virago whose conduct is such that the friends of woman suffrage beg that the newspapers will no longer mention it, or whether the agitator belongs to that type of male or female who thinks that all the world must be revolutionized; everything turned upside down; that thinks all change means progress.

I did not intend to do more than call attention to the singular performance of this morning. Since I have the floor, let me make an appeal to men like the two Senators who express a feeling of nausea at the performance in the park. I repeat, I think it was not so fearful or bad a thing. They simply did not know there was any such thing, perhaps, as a statute against meeting in the park. I do not mean that they were ignorant people, but women's minds do not much run toward keeping track of statutes and ordinances and regulations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. When I finish the sentence I will be glad to yield. That is the real reason why women should not be clamoring for the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator recall that the head of the organization which organized that demonstration, in a letter which was published in the press, announced their plan and that the women who came here to Washington to take part in that program had better be prepared to be arrested?

Mr. REED. I would not say that; but even if these ladies did know there was an ordinance, law, or regulation they did not know that they were expected to obey it, because, I repeat, women have always had some rights that are superior to any law. [Laughter.] We men have conceded it to them, and just as long as they remain gentle and womanly, like our mothers were and like most of them are going to be, in spite of all the agitators of the earth, we will continue to concede these rights to them. So the suffragist to-day has a perfect right to walk into any Senator's office, no matter if he is in consultation with a member of the Cabinet, and demand an "immediate audience for just three seconds until I can talk to you, sir," and then stay there three hours and tell you four or five times during the course of the conversation that you are only "a brute," "a back number," "a fossil," and "a relic of the Stone Age." During all this you are expected to smile and graciously thank her for the compliment. [Laughter.] Ladies are not held to any laws or regulations or rules.

Of course, if a man were to do the same thing under similar circumstances you would invite him over to the window and show him how many feet it is to the pavement. But you never think of doing that with the ladies, simply because they are ladies. Why should they be expected to obey the regulations for a city park? They only went down there to enjoy the right of free speech, and a woman has the right of free speech anywhere, any time, any place, under any circumstances. Nobody has a right to stop her. [Laughter.] As suggested to me by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the eminent advocate of woman suffrage, a man learned in all phases of human knowledge and experience, you could not stop her if you tried. [Laughter.] Now, the Senator from Colorado repudiates this leadership. He says the ladies were not the real leaders. I inquire, Who are the real leaders? These same leaders are the vestal virgins who have kept the fire burning night and day upon the altars of woman suffrage. "These are they who have come out of great tribulation," and out of county jails and various other places, where "they have suffered for righteousness' sake." These are the ladies who have gone up and down the country holding aloft the banner of purple and gold, not merely calling but demanding that all Congressmen and other public officials join them, upon pain of political extermination. These are the same ladies who are going into the districts of Congressmen and into the States of Senators discovering their political friends and inducing them to write that if they do not yield "the one necessary vote at this time" they will be cast into outer darkness at the next election.

By the way, also "these are they" who are duly represented by candidates running in suffrage States against Senators who have been earnest advocates of their social cause. As I look around me I can see the chairs and even look in the faces of Senators who have been champions of the suffrage cause who now find the very lady lobbyists who besought their assistance are out in their States seeking to be elected to fill their seats in the Senate.

> Blow, blow, thou winter winds;
> Thou art not so unkind
> As man's ingratitude.

Surely this is a mixed-up old world. I remember one Senator who for a time had charge of the woman suffrage bill. He is the most genial and kindly perhaps of all the Members of this body. He will on ordinary occasions accede to any reasonable request by a Senator. But when he had charge of the suffrage bill in his zeal he forgot all his wonted kindliness. His heart was stone and his face was adamant. He declined to yield a moment of time. He insisted that the suffrage bill was essential to the salvation of mankind and that therefore all matters must give way.

He stood and contended, and while he contended these same suffragists, who are not leaders, as my friend from Colorado declares, but still ones who have made all of the noise and stirred up all this sentiment, filled these galleries like so many blossoms of beauty, their eyes flashing approval and their hands, in violation of the rules of the Senate, applauding. As the ladies of the far West must have applauded and admired the Senator when in his youthful cowboy days he bestrode a bucking mustang and showed how he could conquer that particular form of wild beast, so did these suffragists now applaud his equally difficult verbal athletics. I doubt not his heart was correspondingly thrilled. Everybody knew the amendment was going to be beaten at that time except the Senator in charge and the lady lobbyists who occupied the gallery. At their demand he went gallantly to the assault. The vote was taken and the amendment was defeated, whereupon the champion of suffrage was summoned to the Marble Room. He went expecting to meet his cohorts and to hear them exclaim, as did another celebrated individual, "This is 'the first battle'; we will immediately organize for the second, in which you shall again gallantly lead us, and we will follow until on some glorious morning we shall behold the golden light of victory flashing upon our banner, which you shall proudly bear as the next President of the United States." That is perhaps what he expected to hear. This is what occurred: He was met by a lady of sour visage, backed by some dozen or more, whose smiles had frozen into lines of contempt, and he was plainly told that the spokesman "had been delegated to inform him that the ladies fully understood that he had betrayed their cause and deliberately forced a vote in order that they might be defeated."

I wonder who are the leaders of this movement! If you want me to name the real leaders of it, I will say this: For some five or six or seven or eight or nine years, perhaps even longer than that, there has been a general state of unrest throughout the world. It has manifested itself in this country and in other lands. Beyond all question, at one time even Great Britain was reeking with the poison of socialism. In our own country the I. W. W.'s had begun to disseminate their evil doctrine and to indulge in their evil practices. Other organizations had taken up similar views. Then great leaders were found to stand sponsor for many of these ideas. I have in mind a leader who declared in substance and effect that the courts of our country could not be trusted, and that an appeal from the decision of a court ought to be awarded to a public vote; that the judge who heard the case should not decide according to the precedents and the law, but ought to cast aside these precedents and decide according to what the judge believed was the right of that particular case.

The individual who announced this startling doctrine did not seem to know that his policy meant the substitution of the will of one man for the law of the land and made free citizens subject to the caprice and whim of a judicial tyrant with no rule except his own will of the moment.

But the undermining work went on. I have in mind muckraking magazine writers who denounced almost all legislative bodies as composed of criminals or crooks or unworthy men. I have in mind others who inveighed against the form of government in our cities and demanded that we should substitute commissions for councils and mayors. I remember one of the advocates of that particular variety of nonsense came to my city and was heralded as the great apostle of progress, but before he got out of town he was advocating the intermarriage of the colored and the white races. Recently one of these civic reformers who visited Kansas City to teach us how to govern ourselves has been called to account for disloyal utterances against the Government.

The demands of the agitators have varied in degree, but fundamentally their purpose was to undermine the confidence of the people in law, in courts, and in government. The vile fruitage of that sort of teaching has been manifested in many places.

I recently read a pronunciamento of the Socialist Party, and I intend to pay more particular attention to it in the near future. It is enough to say that their real doctrines, if they were carried into effect, would dismantle the United States Navy, dissolve the United States Army, and leave us with Germany at our throats, as the action of the Bolsheviki left Russia with Germany her master.

This bolshevism of Russia exists in our own country and in England—in every country under a different name. Fundamentally it is a warfare upon the precepts of civilization, on property rights, on government of law, upon the orderly course of justice. The propaganda basically denounces the existing order and demands a change in everything that is.

Because of that undertow, the woman-suffrage movement has gained its great force. People who have been taught to distrust all that is are willing to accept any change that is offered. So they say women should vote. If you ask them what wrongs women have suffered and you can get a concrete statement of the wrong, you can invariably demonstrate that the wrong does not exist or that it is not the result of a refusal of the right to vote.

If you ask them what reforms they propose to work, they are likely to point to the glorious laws of certain suffrage States. But you can invariably point to nonsuffrage States that have adopted the same reforms years before they were adopted in the suffrage States. If you ask them what particular thing they propose to do, the only answer you get, in the long run, is that "they propose to vote," and when you ask them what they propose to do with that vote they answer that "they propose to vote."

When you ask them, then, why they are not willing to go into the various States and ask the people of those States to amend their constitution or their laws giving them the right to vote in that particular State, what is their answer? They answer that they do not want to go to that much trouble. The cold truth of the matter is they very well understand that unless they can force suffrage upon the States the majority of whose people do not want suffrage they will not obtain the right to vote in certain States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that there are certain obstructions in the constitutions of the various States by which you do not have a fair opportunity of submitting the question, such as, for instance, in one State where you can not submit an amendment but once in 10 years, in another State where it has to be submitted by the votes of two successive legislatures, and if an intervening one does not agree there can be no submission? In a number of other States you can not amend the constitution except by a constitutional convention. By reason of all which it is impossible to submit these matters to the people of the States as the women would desire.

Mr. REED. Now, the Senator has named 2 States with extraordinary constitutions, 2 out of 48. So far as constitutional conventions are concerned they can be called in any State whenever a majority of the people want them called. It is utterly idle to stand and argue that if a strong majority of the people, an active, live majority of the people, of any State want to amend the constitution so as to provide for woman suffrage it can not be secured. There is no State in this Union with any such law or with any such constitutional limitation as will prohibit the people of that State from changing the constitution if they really want a change.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In just one moment. It is true there are two or three States where the constitution requires that there shall be certain forms gone through with, and one of those States, I believe, is the State of New Mexico, which has some provisions making it rather difficult to amend the constitution, a provision I contended against, but the people of New Mexico seemed to want it, for they wrote that kind of a constitution. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I simply wanted to give the Senator some information in regard to that matter. The constitution prohibits the calling of a constitutional convention for the period of 25 years, and to amend the constitution with regard to suffrage requires three-fourths of the legislature. It requires that the amendment itself shall receive the favorable vote of two-thirds of the counties.

Mr. REED. Yes; that is true of two or three constitutions. It is true of the benighted constitution of the Senator's State. I do not believe the Senator is responsible for those provisions in that constitution; but when the constitution was submitted here to the Senate I was one of the men who tried to amend it and to have those provisions taken out. But Senators have succeeded in referring now to two States of that kind out of the 48.

The fact still remains that a majority of the people in every State of this Union, if we except the State of the Senator from New Mexico, which only recently adopted its constitution, can amend the constitution, and the ladies can obtain the right to vote whenever they get a real majority in favor of their proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize that in order to amend the constitution you have got to make a paramount issue in order to get the people aroused upon the subject and that it is a burden which does not exist in ordinary matters? Instead of being 2, I am satisfied that there are no less than 12 or 15 States that have obstructions of a very serious nature to the submission of constitutional amendments. There was one in my State for a long while and that was that no more than one constitutional provision should be submitted at an election.

Mr. REED. When was that in your constitution?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was in our constitution, I think, about 1890.

Mr. REED. With that on your books you adopted woman suffrage?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; we amended that constitutional provision. We did not adopt woman suffrage as a constitutional amendment in the first instance. The original constitution authorized a submission to the voters of the question by any legislature. It was afterwards adopted as a constitutional amendment in Colorado.

Mr. REED. You got it first by statute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We got it first by statutory submission.

Mr. REED. Then why do you cite the constitution of Colorado? You cite the constitution of Colorado as having tied the hands of the people so that they could not grant woman suffrage, and then you tell us in the same breath that the legislature had a right to grant it by statute and did grant it by statute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I am simply citing as illustration that in most States it is required to be adopted by constitutional amendment. Colorado is an exception in the matter. In fact, it was turned down on one occasion, and was not voted at the time the constitution was adopted; but there are obstructions in a number of States. There is one State in this Union where there were two successive legislatures that adopted the submission to the people, and yet, by reason of the fact that the secretary of state failed to publish the fact, it could not be submitted to the people.

Mr. REED. Exactly, and that has happened in regard to constitutional amendments or similar things time and again; some officer of the law has refused to properly carry out the law. But does the Senator argue seriously here in this Chamber that the Federal Government should step in and change the laws of the States because some State officer in some one State, in violation of his oath, failed to perform his duty in the matter of printing an amendment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there are some other reasons besides those. The main reason is, and it seems to me the Senator ought to recognize it, that it violates the fundamental principle of our Government, which says that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. No answer can be made to that, whether it is applied to the Federal Government or the State government. Whenever you do not give that right you have not a true democracy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have demonstrated my case. The Senator rose to state certain objections, and I have driven him from them absolutely and finally. He then has recourse to the old cry about the consent of the governed, a cry that is as ancient as Adam and that has absolutely nothing to do with this case. That is an argument which can be answered but it can not be answered to a suffragette, for nothing can render an answer to a real, Simon-pure, blown-in-the-bottle suffragette. The answer is that in every government of earth there has been a limitation upon the exercise of the right of suffrage.

Those limitations have been of numerous kinds. There have been governments of States, there are States yet, where a property qualification is required. There are many States where there are educational qualifications required. Shall the man who is ignorant say that the State that refuses to allow him to vote because of his ignorance has violated the principles of the Constitution or the Declaration of Independence? The courts have universally held otherwise. Likewise, the boy 18 years old might come forward and say that "all just governments derive their power from the consent of the governed, and I am outraged and wronged by virtue of the fact that the law draws the line and says I can not vote until I am 21 years of age." How much more he might say that to-day, when we are certain to pass a bill that will call to the colors and place upon the firing line every boy of 18 years and upward? When this boy is called upon to defend this Government, to bare his bosom to the blasts of war, to march through bloody trenches, and to look into the eyes of death he has not been permitted to vote, but he has a country and equality before the law, and he has the protection of the law, and he has the defense of the Army and the Navy of the United States, and the right of a citizen.

How is it about the ladies? They do not vote in most States, but is it true that they are not represented? I wonder if my old mother, 90 years of age, who taught me almost every principle I have that is good, is not represented by my vote. I wonder if there is enough influence in all this world to make me cast a vote that I thought would be unjust to that heroic old woman. Not all the powers of earth or perdition could make me do that willingly; and what is true of me is true of you, and what is true of you and me is true of nearly every man who walks this earth. Where is the man who would not defend his mother in her rights? Where is the man who would not die rather than do her injury? There may be here and there such a one, but if so he is a throwback to the age when men were animals which did not yet possess a soul. I wonder if the wives of these Senators, and these Congressmen, and these electors are not in any way represented by their husbands' votes. I wonder if it is true that the women of this country gave their hearts and hands to creatures who are so vile, so low, and so contemptible that they can not be trusted to vote for laws that will be just to them. What rot you are talking. I wonder if the men who donned the uniform of their country and who have gone forth to fight and perhaps die to keep this country and the great world free—I wonder if these men who can be trusted to save their country on the bloody battle field can not be trusted to preserve it in the ballot boxes. I wonder if the men who are willing to die in defense of their country will come home and pass unjust laws to oppress the women they fought for. Are the wives, sisters, and mothers of such men not represented?

Are they not as well represented by such men as they would be by some suffragette who is without regard for law, who holds meetings in defiance of public statutes, who pickets the home of the President, and whose chief ambition is to break into jail?

Not all suffragists are thus affected. I speak of a minority, but a very noisy and insistent minority, who occupy positions as leaders.

I believe it is fundamental that each State should have the right to settle the question of the qualification of its voters, and to settle that question for itself subject only to the constitutional limitation that each State must have a republican form of government. I believe that my distinguished friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], who lives among a people and in an environment that is very different from the environment of the people of my State, knows better what will make for the good of the Commonwealth of Connecticut than I can possibly know. I know more about what the people of Missouri need than the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, just as he knows more about what the people of New Mexico need than I can possibly know.

This country is 3,000 miles from east to west and 1,500 miles from north to south. It embraces almost every variety of climate from the Arctic regions to the Torrid Zone and has as many varieties of life, of business, and of environment as can be found in a dozen or 20 different countries in Europe. Therefore the people of the different States ought to be allowed to determine the qualifications of their own voters.

Now, no amount of persuasion would ever get me to vote to amend the Constitution of the United States so that the State of Colorado could not allow the women to vote, nor to amend the Constitution so that the State of Nevada could not grant the privilege of woman suffrage if it desired, because I think each State knows enough to attend to its own business. I have a sort of a notion that in a blundering, old-fashioned kind of a way Missouri and Georgia know how to take care of their own affairs. We know our people; we know their wants. So I say that each State should be allowed to settle the question of suffrage for itself.

But I will make this proposition to Senators: I will vote for a constitutional amendment that will submit woman suffrage to the people of the respective States at a general election held for that purpose, to become effective when it is ratified by the popular vote of the people of three-fourths of the States at that election. Of course we shall have to add to that that the State legislatures must thereupon make the necessary ratification; but the provision can be legally worked out. I am willing to vote for an amendment of that nature.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. But I do not propose to submit the amendment in such a way that the legislature of a State having a total voting population of 30,000 shall have as much to say in the matter of an amendment of this kind as a State that has a voting population of 4,000,000. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator to distinguish between his proposition and the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. REED. In part I have done so, but I shall give another distinction.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to have the distinction made clear, because it does seem to me that the proposed amendment would come about as near getting the sentiment of the country as any proposition suggested by the Senator. It would require now the affirmative assent to ratification of three-fourths of the States. I do not see much distinction between that and the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. REED. There is the distinction I have named, and there is another very great distinction. You say this amendment to the Constitution can not be adopted until it is consented to by the people of three-fourths of the States. Nothing of the kind exists. The legislature of Arizona, the legislature of New Mexico, the legislature of Colorado, and the legislatures of various States meet, and those members of the legislature say whether the amendment shall be ratified or not. That is true of every amendment to the Constitution, but you are proposing now for the first time, with the exception of the amendments that were adopted immediately after the war, to interfere with a right that has always been conceded to the States. Therefore I say I am so confident of the result that I would be willing to submit it to a vote of the people. But let us see how the present method of submission results. The total number of members of the general assemblies of the United States, I think, runs in the neighborhood of four or five thousand.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator does not mean to insist that the legislatures of the States do not represent the people of the States in the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. REED. I see the Senator smiles. I think the Senator knows that I know how the Constitution is to be amended. I say this amendment is entirely different from an amendment which concerns an ordinary matter. This goes to the very right of the State to control the very source of its government. It has never been interfered with since the foundation of this Government except during the reconstruction period after the war.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like the Senator to answer the question asked by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. I do not think he quite understood it. The Senator from Arkansas, as I understood his question, asked the Senator from Missouri whether he did not think that the vote of the legislatures of the States was always representative of the opinion of the people of the States.

Mr. REED. I undoubtedly do not think so, and the suffragists do not think so. I have talked with their leaders; I have talked with some of those who have been arrested, and therefore possess the badge of authority, the certificate of nobility.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. I am unable to understand how the Senator can insist that he represents here the women of the Nation. Unquestionably he represents his State in the Senate and represents the Nation. How can he say that the legislature of a State, when it adopts an amendment proposed to the Constitution by this Congress duly submitted to it, does not represent the people of the State?

Mr. REED. I shall make it so plain that my friend can understand. Every State in this Union, including the Senator's own great State, has a constitution, and in that constitution there are turned over to the legislature of the State certain propositions which the people saw fit to consign to the men who go to the legislature to decide. But at the same time the Senator's own State in its constitution reserved to the people of that State certain questions that the people would vote upon but which the legislature could not. The people reserved those great fundamental rights to themselves and did not permit the legislature to touch them. They kept them for a direct vote.

Now, my claim is that when you propose a change of qualification of the voters of the States by an amendment to the Federal Constitution, you have entered into that very type and class of questions which the States have reserved by their constitutions to the people and have not generally granted to the legislature. Of course, it is true that under the Federal Constitution we have provided that the ratification can be made by the legislature, but I am saying that I am not willing to submit this kind of amendment to that sort of a ratification. However, I am willing to submit it to a ratification of the votes of the people of the State.

Now let me point out another thing for a moment, and I am taking over an hour on this matter when I intended to take only five minutes, and that in a jocular vein.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator one more question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KIRBY. I assume from the Senator's last statement that he is willing to submit it to a vote of the people, because there is no law by which any such submission can be made.

Mr. REED. The Senator has no right to make any such assumption. My statement was very clear and explicit that the amendment would have to be so drawn as to give it vitality. Such an amendment can undoubtedly be prepared, and we have one submitted now, one with regard to prohibition, with a clause requiring ratification within a particular time.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. But I do not care to pursue that.

Mr. KIRBY. I was only going to ask the Senator, who is a lawyer of well-known ability, if, in his opinion, any such provision in a proposed amendment would not be absolute surplusage and would not be so regarded by any court in passing upon the construction of it, upon the question of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. REED. I have said three times, I believe, that, in my opinion, such an amendment can be prepared and that it will be binding if drawn in the right way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand, then, from the Senator's statement that he no longer makes serious objection to imposing upon one-fourth of the States woman suffrage, provided three-fourths of the States impose it by a popular vote.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator does not understand me that way. I have said very plainly that I adhere to the proposition that we have no right to enforce it, but that nevertheless I would willingly, as a matter of compromise, submit it to a popular vote. I will state frankly why I am willing to do so. Because it will never be adopted that way, because the people of this country are not for it, because in election after election that has been demonstrated, because the victories you have achieved have been victories in the legislatures, with one or two remarkable exceptions, the last one being New York, where it is admitted that the Socialist vote, the disloyal vote of the city of New York, was the determining factor.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to state that I have looked into the facts bearing upon the statement just made by the Senator, and my analysis of the vote in New York does not bear out the statement the Senator has just made.

Mr. REED. I do not know what analysis the Senator has reached, but every prominent Socialist was advocating it in the city of New York. The whole Socialist organization was back of it in the city of New York. The amendment was beaten in the State at large, but succeeded in the city of New York with the whole Socialist organization back of it. They are not only for it in New York, but the Bolsheviki are for it in Russia. The Socialists are for it in every country on the earth. You can take a vote to-morrow of all those gentlemen who conspired to turn Russia over to Germany, and I do not believe you will find one of them who is not an earnest advocate of woman suffrage. You can find that class in favor of it that we fear in this war. The only thing we do fear is the undermining processes that may go on secretly; but you can not find a single "sapper and miner" who is not for woman suffrage.

Mr. President, I have digressed because of these questions from the statement I was about to make. There is this further distinction between a submission to the people of the States and a submission to the legislatures. When it is submitted to the people at least you get the popular opinion, and you must have a majority of the popular vote in the respective States. There is time for discussion, there is time for debate, there is time for consideration, and there is a ballot where people can vote their choice. But when you submit the matter to the legislature of the State you submit the fate of this great question, perhaps the fate of the Nation, to general assemblies with an aggregate membership, I think, in the United States of approximately 4,000.

A mere majority of a legislature can commit the people of the State. It is easy to demonstrate that less than 2,000 men might change this fundamental law of our country. These men would be beset by agitators and lobbyists backed by money. Such a lobby has been maintained at enormous expense, and has proceeded in a way that would not be tolerated if persisted in by any other body than one composed of the privileged sex. All this money and all this lobby, all this bulldozing, all this threatening would be centered upon the State legislatures.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize that not one dollar of money has been spent but in extending the arguments in favor of woman suffrage, that the lobby, as the Senator calls it, has not been of a corrupt nature, and that not a single dollar has ever found its way into the pockets of a single Representative or a single Senator of the United States?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not say anybody had sold his vote. I did not intimate that anybody had bought any votes. I leave that to the muckraking reformers, who are all woman suffragists. There are a good many ways to use money and to organize lobbies that become very effective without getting down to grossly buying somebody's vote. I will say this, that in point of impudence and in point of threatening I do not think the parallel has been furnished in the history of our Government for that which has been going on recently and is going on now.

Neither do I think that there has ever been anything that paralleled the really unlawful and almost seditious conduct of those women who posted themselves in front of the White House to daily insult the President of the United States. I qualify that expression of "seditious conduct," for I do not mean to say it rose to the point of the use of arms. When has that sort of thing happened before? How long would it be tolerated if undertaken by men? Suppose that the I. W. W.'s were to go down there to-morrow with a proceeding of that kind, the probability is that they would never get off the street alive. It is certain that they would not get off alive unless the police appeared before the people had time to gather.

Mr. President, I have talked to some of these leaders; I have asked them why they do not submit their demand to the States and have the battle out in the States. They have answered me that they do not want to submit this question to popular vote. They have said they want it in the legislature, where they can get at the members easily. Well, it is that class of questions that ought to be submitted to a popular vote. The very fact that many of the State constitutions require that there shall not be any change in the electorate without a vote of the people shows how fundamental this right and privilege has always been regarded.

Mr. President, I call attention to another thing. With this war upon us the most wonderful example has been furnished of the readiness of the people to lay aside all other matters and to devote themselves to the war. It is the most wonderful example furnished in all history. Matters of legislation of great moment have been laid aside by State and National legislative bodies, plans for the internal improvement of our country of almost vital importance have been pushed aside, great principles underlying the raising of revenue have been disregarded, the business of half the country has been placed under control with scarcely a murmur. The great business concerns of the country have accepted the decree which subjected them in their ordinary investments to war regulations. Every other question is forgotten except woman suffrage. The woman suffragist is not willing to help finish the war, and then in the cool, calm light that will come after the war is over to settle the suffrage question. But regardless of its possible effect upon the war, regardless of everything, the suffragists propose to have their way. They put that above winning the war. They thrust it in here when the human mind is on a tension, when everybody is working to the limit of his ability upon the great war problems, and at a time when we are seeking to inspire supreme confidence in our Government they parade the streets and flaunt their banners and insult the President of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is not the Senator from Missouri aware that they have induced the President of the United States to state that the passage of this proposed Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a war measure?

Mr. REED. Well, whatever the President may have said about that, whatever the motive may have been, I do not agree to any such proposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Neither do I.

Mr. REED. A war measure? What will it do for the war? Will it put another soldier upon the battle front? If so, where are you going to get him? We have granted every soldier up to date asked for, and if I am not desperately misled we are going to grant the request now for every man from 18 to 45, and when they are gone I have no doubt we will, if necessary, reach into the very cradle with one hand and into the grave with the other, because we propose to win this war.

Will it add a ship? If so, how and when will it add it? Will it add an ounce of powder or a single shell? If so, in what way, and how, and when? Will it increase the activities in which the good women are now engaged, and God's great blessing fall upon them as they work at their sweet and humane task? Will it send a single needle flying swifter in the hands of a woman who makes garments under the sacred emblem of the Red Cross? Will it inspire any more industry? Will it encourage the women who are working to-day for the Red Cross? They will still work, and they will work whether they vote or do not vote. The only advantage I can imagine would be that possibly some of these suffragists might go to work for the Red Cross who are now out lobbying.

I can tell them where they can get work. Rolling bandages. I can tell them where they can get work. Knitting for men who will shiver the coming winter. I can tell them where they can get work that will aid the war. Every pair of socks and every sweater and every bandage will be of help.

But wherein is this a war measure? Are we to understand that these women are creating so much discontent or that they are themselves so discontented with their present condition that unless we give them the right to vote they will hold back the war? Is that the indictment brought against the women who are clamoring to vote? If that indictment be not wrapped up in the statement, what does the statement mean? Are they going to change the Government during the war? Surely not that, because the President is securely in his seat, and will remain in his seat until the end of his term. Are they going to change the Congress? There is no necessity for that, for Congress has obeyed the slightest nod of the President. Wherein is it a war measure?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will pardon me, as he has asked that question, I will say I have seen it stated in the public prints that the President's view is that it is a war measure in this sense, that it is necessary to give the right to vote to women by amending the United States Constitution in order to satisfy certain European countries that we are really waging this war for democracy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not going to be drawn into any criticism of the President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Nor I, but I should like to have the Senator discuss the matter.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator to say that again. I should like to get it into my head.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not get it in my head; I had it in my ear, and it was something to this effect, that the time had come when, in order to satisfy certain European nations that we were really waging this war to make the world safe for democracy, we must have universal suffrage in this country.

Mr. REED. Let us stop and ask what nation. England? No. England has not granted it. England still has a king and a hereditary aristocracy. France? No; France has not granted it herself.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that on the 6th day of February of this year the right of suffrage was given to women in Ireland, in Scotland, in England, and in Wales?

Mr. REED. A limited right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A limited right only as to age.

Mr. REED. What age?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Thirty years.

Mr. REED. That would be nine-tenths of them. I can prove by the statistics that that statement is true. [Laughter.]

I will not consent to change the laws of States to make ourselves more democratic in order to please any country that still has a King. France is the only Republic in this war except ourselves, and France has manhood suffrage. Not a single Frenchman will charge with any greater keenness or die with any more courage because we give women the right to vote. What about Italy? It is a monarchy. Do we have to grant suffrage in order that we may advance to the high democratic ground that monarchy holds?

Where, then, is the ally that we must satisfy? Is it Russia? There is only one thing worse than an autocracy that I have ever known, and that is Bolshevikism. Are we to grant suffrage to women in the United States to please the Bolsheviki? I say the sooner we let the Bolsheviki know that they can not betray us to Germany, the sooner we give them to understand that they must keep their covenant of faith, the better, and that instead of catering to them by changing our laws to please that combination of insanity, of brutality, and of anarchy, the sooner we tell them there are international responsibilities that must be recognized by them, the better it will be.

A war measure? There is not a man in this Chamber who believes it is a war measure. So far as I am concerned, and let me say this with due deliberation, I will never change an important law of the United States written by the people of this country to please any nation on this earth. I will not do it to please the long-haired, wild-eyed, anarchistic Bolsheviki. I will not do it to please any king who sits upon a throne. I will not do it or permit it if I can help it, save only when the people of this country, considering their own affairs, believe the law ought to be changed.

Mr. President, I did not intend to stand here two minutes when I took the floor. I have said this much principally because a great Army bill is coming here, and I am wondering if it is going to be delayed while we discuss prohibition or while we discuss woman suffrage. I am wondering if the advocates of these measures can not lay them aside at least until we can pass laws so that we can put the necessary men to win this war upon the fighting front in France.

Mr. President, I want to discuss that question, and if the Senate will give me its attention on next Monday I shall very briefly speak upon the question of enlarging the draft age.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, during the discussion of the woman suffrage amendment which has occurred this morning I have been exceedingly interested in hearing the apologies of the advocates of woman suffrage for the spectacle which the leaders of the Woman Suffrage Party exhibited to the public of Washington and to the Nation the other day.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator does not feel that I apologized. I criticized.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I am the more pleased.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I may have been an apologist for occurrences the other day, but it was unintentional. I did not apologize for it. I have in some degree denounced it, as I have heretofore had occasion to speak rather severely of similar practices in the past.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Again I am the more pleased. Instead of apologies I now understand that they are criticisms and denunciations, with which I heartily concur.

I can not concur, however, with the suggestion that the women who indulged in this spectacle opposite the White House day before yesterday are not leaders in this movement. My conviction is that they are leaders in it. They have been leaders in it for many years past. I know that there are some other leaders of this movement who in public contend that they have nothing to do with the so-called pickets or with the so-called Woman Suffrage Party. It is true that they endeavor not to be seen with them, as it were, and they endeavor to create the impression when these unfortunate occurrences take place here in Washington that they are not to their liking. In part that may be true, but for many, many months, Senators, we have seen these two groups, if we may call them two groups, of women working together in the lobbies of the Senate, conferring together in utmost friendship, comparing notes, importuning Senators, with no distinction as between the two groups, addressing each other by their Christian names, with no sign of enmity between them.

Indeed, the women who perpetrated the spectacle opposite the White House day before yesterday are leaders in this movement and cooperate with other women leaders; and it will not suffice for Senators merely to denounce them and them alone, because in most respects they all work together, even if they endeavor to create the impression that they do not.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the merits of this amendment. We have not the time nor has the Senate the patience. I want to call to the attention of Senators here present, however, something of the attitude of mind of these leaders and something of their methods, to call to the attention of the Senators some of their own utterances. I make no argument, but simply quote their official utterances. Senators have been experiencing the pressure that has been brought to bear here for two or three years, and many other men in public life have been experiencing it in other legislative bodies. It has not been a new experience for me. I think Senators will be interested if I read to them a description of the methods pursued by the headquarters of the Woman Suffrage Party here in Washington as portrayed in their own official journal. I read from the publication known as the Suffragist, under date of February 7, 1917. On page 8 of that publication I find the following paragraph descriptive of the work which that organization is doing in the Congress. I quote:

> The center from which all the legislative work is directed and where its results are all put down in black and white is in the legislative office at headquarters.

I assume that the headquarters are upon Lafayette Square.

> The big filing cases in this room sum up exactly the legislative work of the Congressional Union.

I may say that at the time this was published the organization was known as the Congressional Union; I understand it has been changed to the National Woman Suffrage Party.

> Here is set down—

I continue the quotation—

> the record of every Congressman. Every fact that has any bearing on his personality, opinions, and mental make-up is minutely detailed—where he was born, where he went to school, what his special studies were if he went to college, his family, his home, his church, his clubs, and his lodges—no detail is overlooked that might give a lobbyist insight into how best to approach him.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that there is a prohibition organization in the United States that carries on a similar practice, and also the American Federation of Labor, and also the National Association of Manufacturers? The practice may be reprehensible, but it is not exclusive to that particular organization.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not aware of what other organizations do this. I am merely reading from the official paper of this organization whose representatives we see here day after day visiting and talking with Senators.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Colorado mentions two or three organizations, among them the National Manufacturers' Association. When we get down to dealing with mere men I observe that the National Manufacturers' Association was castigated here on the floor of Congress, was investigated, disgraced, and practically forced into dissolution, and there was serious thought about passing a law punishing lobbyists. But, of course, no one would think of applying that to the dear women.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have made no comment whatsoever upon the paragraphs that I have read from this journal. I think, however, it is of sufficient interest to hold a place in the record of the Congress and for the information of Senators. The paragraph merely continues to recite how all this information about a man's education, his family, his home, or any detail that may give the lobbyist a chance to get him is recorded.

Something has been said in speeches made this morning about the motives back of this, about the motives impelling the advocates of suffrage to insist upon a Federal amendment rather than submit it to the people of the several States.

Again, Mr. President, I shall make no argument whatsoever. I shall simply lay before the Senate some of the statements of the leaders of the movement which in my humble judgment describe truthfully their purposes and their motives, and if I am mistaken in regarding some of these women as leaders, perhaps either of the Senators from Colorado will correct me.

I find that on December 6, 1916, Mrs. Ida Husted Harper, who is known as the suffrage historian, said at a convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association at Atlantic City:

> Why were both Republican and Democratic conventions willing to favor woman suffrage through State action?

And be it remembered that the conventions of both great parties declared that this matter should be left to the people of the several States. I continue the quotation:

> Because they knew they were putting it off until doomsday.

That was Mrs. Harper's judgment of that action.

> We have had enough of appealing to the individual voter with his secret ballot.

That is the utterance of one leader. She also stated on this same occasion:

The suffragists have won only nine times in 40 State campaigns. It may take another 40 years by this method to win.

Again, on July 26, the same lady in an interview in the Herald-Republican, of Salt Lake City, Utah, said:

There is no hope for the Democratic Party in this matter, as it is the State-rights party. We are tired of fighting for suffrage State after State. We have reached the end of our resources, and the 12 States which now have suffrage seem to me to be the only ones we will ever get.

I may interject, Mr. President, that since then the State of New York voted for suffrage, making 13 States.

The defeat in Iowa was a setback to our cause. Our poll of the State showed we had three-quarters of the voters, but it was reversed on election day, evidence that we have no chance against the secret ballot.

The Woman Voter, another publication, which is an official organ of the suffragists, in its issue of November, 1916, said, and this, Senators, is eloquent:

Legislatures are more sensitive politically to party dictation, party political debts, and business interests than are the voters.

I quote again from another lady, who, I assume, Senators will agree is a leader in this movement. On December 5, 1913, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, who is president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, declared at a suffrage convention in Washington, D. C., as follows:

If our Constitution prevents our enfranchisement, I say "let us tear it into shreds and make a new one." Our cause can wait no longer. We must train our guns upon Congress, upon the South; we must train them even upon some members of our own organization, for we want freedom by Federal amendment, and we want it now.

Prof. Charles Beard, of Columbia University, who, if I remember correctly, has been separated from the faculty of that university recently, since our entrance into the war, at least, said this, as reported by the New York Tribune of November 12, 1915:

Give no Member of Congress any peace, night or day, until they pass the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. * * * When they do that their responsibility ends and they can have peace.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, speaking before the Woman Suffrage Committee of the House of Representatives on January 3, 1918, said:

We have now come to the time when we no longer want a referendum, when we will no longer take a referendum, and when we therefore come to Congress and ask for a Federal amendment.

Mr. President, I have read these quotations because I believe they truthfully portray the reasons for the pressing of a Federal amendment. These leaders say themselves that they fear the voter with his secret ballot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate stands adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock.

Thereupon the Senate (at 2 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until Monday, August 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 8, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. KITCHIN, Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, in the onward sweep of time conditions are continually changing in the affairs of men, sometimes to their good, sometimes to their hurt; but Thou art ever the same, ministering continually to their needs, pouring out Thy love in behalf of Thy children. But man is selfish, egotistical, grasping, self-seeking, and strangely perverse; illustrated by the terrible war through which we are passing. Thus man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn.

Teach us the simple life, humility, kindness, generosity, and nobility of soul, that the world may be a little better that we have lived and wrought.

In the dispensation of Thy providence a strong, pure, noble, wise, and faithful man has been removed by death from this legislative body. We mourn his going, but rejoice in the fact that we have known him and felt the strength of his great soul. Comfort us, his colleagues, friends, and those to whom he was nearest and dearest, with the blessed hope that sometime, somewhere, we shall again be blessed by his presence and guided on our way by his life and character; after the similitude of the world's great Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, August 5, 1918, was read and approved.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE DAVIDSON.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret that I announce the death of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, a Representative in Congress from the sixth district of the State of Wisconsin, who died in this city yesterday. At a later time the House will be asked to lay aside its other business for the purpose of holding a memorial service in honor of the life, character, and distinguished public services of Mr. DAVIDSON.

I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 421.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. ESCH, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. NELSON, Mr. CARY, Mr. FREAR, Mr. BROWNE, Mr. CLASSON, Mr. VOIGT, Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, Mr. HUMPHREYS, Mr. WILSON of Illinois, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa, Mr. GALLAGHER, and Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following further resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The adjournment will be until Monday next.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, August 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 12, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast bound us together in this great land of the free with ties that are stronger than life and that defy the powers of death. Thou hast linked us together by a common ideal, with a passion to preserve the right that Thou hast committed unto men. To-day as we make sacrifices of means and of men, supreme sacrifices in many cases, we look to Thee for Thy blessing and guidance. We pray Thee to hasten the day for victory, when we shall have accomplished the will of God and brought again peace with honor and with happiness to all mankind. Hear us in our prayer this morning. Fit us for the duties of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
August 12, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. NELSON and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FRENCH NATIONAL FÊTE DAY (H. DOC. NO. 1256).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, with the accompanying communication, which will be read:

The communications were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 8, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a note from the French ambassador, wherein, by instruction of his Government, he asks that both Houses of the Congress of the United States be advised of the feelings of gratification with which the resolutions passed by them on the occasion of July 14, the French national fête day, were received by the Government and by the whole French nation.

A letter similar to this has been addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

EMBASSY OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC TO THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 31, 1918.

Hon. FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In accordance with instructions I have received from my Government, I take the liberty of asking that you be so good as to inform both Houses of Congress of the feelings of gratification with which the resolutions voted by them on the occasion of the 14th of July were received by the Government and by the whole French nation.

The text of those resolutions evidenced once more that moral kinship existing between two peoples, equally ready to fight absolutism, tyranny, injustice, brutality, and whose national fête days, both dating back from Revolutionary times, have the same meaning, which is emancipation.

We hope the end of the present conflict may be not far removed; we know that it will not occur before our common aims have been fully achieved, and before what the Fourth and Fourteenth of July stand for has been definitely secured—the end of tyranny.

Believe me, dear Mr. Secretary, very sincerely, yours,

JUSSERAND.

NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 271).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of July 13, 1918, a list of officers of the National Guard discharged and dismissed from the service since the beginning of the present war, by States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Faribault, Minn., remonstrating against a tax being placed on pool rooms and billiard parlors, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial from J. A. Luger, of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed additional taxes on automobiles, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Arkansas, now in session, urging upon Congress the passage of the amendments now pending prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war in the interest of food conservation and sobriety. I also desire to state in this connection that the Democratic State convention of Arkansas favored similar legislation by resolution, and the resolution was passed unanimously by each body.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Act No. 172. House concurrent resolution No. 16. (By Mr. Ashford.)

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of Louisiana, the Senate concurring, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use their exertion to procure a speedy settlement of the swamp-land grants of March 2, 1849, and September 28, 1850, in the mode and manner that they may deem most proper, and secure for the State of Louisiana the abandoned military reservations situated in this State; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress copies of this resolution.

HEWITT BOUANCHAUD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
FERNAND MOUTON,
Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

Approved July 9, 1918.

R. G. PLEASANT,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

A true copy.
[SEAL.]

R. H. FLOWER,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Act No. 181. House concurrent resolution No. 28. (By Mr. Meyer.)

Whereas the metropolis of the South, the city of New Orleans, is the ideal American terminal of lines to all South American, Central American, and Mexican ports; and

Whereas because of its vast port facilities and because it is the natural distributional point for the great Mississippi Valley and because the distance between New Orleans and all Latin American ports is shorter than between Latin America and New York, thereby permitting a greater saving of bunker fuel and a greater utilization of tonnage: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana (the Senate concurring), That application be made and hereby is made to the United States Shipping Board, that it will include New Orleans in its plan for the establishment of direct government steamship lines to all parts of the world, and that it will recognize New Orleans and give to New Orleans the trade that New Orleans is justly entitled to, not only because of New Orleans' geographical situation, which will save thousands of tons of bunker fuel and the utilization of hundreds of thousands of tonnage, but because New Orleans is the logical port for the trade between South American, Central American, and Mexican ports; and besides New Orleans has the port facilities which are second to none in the country to handle said trade.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this application to the United States Shipping Board, and to the several members of the United States Congress representing this State therein.

HEWITT BOUANCHAUD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
FERNAND MOUTON,
Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

Approved July 10, 1918.

R. G. PLEASANT,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

Assistant Secretary of State.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 4861) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 4862) to provide for admissions to St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a copy of a report of a survey of the work of paying allowances and allotments and other benefits under the war-risk insurance act to the families and dependents of soldiers, which was made at the joint instance of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury. The document contains information which will be valuable to the country, and I think it should be put in a form in which it will be available to Senators. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing so that that committee may order it printed as a public document, if the committee should deem it advisable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

CANCELLATION OF CHARTER OF GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on the 1st of August I submitted some remarks in the Senate on the subject of the cancellation of the charter of the German-American Alliance. Since making those remarks I have received the following telegram from Mr. Bartholdt, former Member of Congress. I desire to read the telegram:

Your statements do me a grave injustice. Never in my long public life did I utter sentiments such as you attribute to me. As the son of a father who had the courage of being a democrat in Germany I was imbued from childhood with democratic ideas. As a representative American of German origin I incessantly preached Americanism and loyalty to our flag and ideals in all my public speeches. The district I represented in Congress embraced much of the culture and wealth of St. Louis, and its constituency surely would not have returned me to Congress for 11 consecutive terms if not thoroughly convinced of my loyalty to American ideals. The alleged utterances to which you have reference were never made. In the Hughes campaign, while our country was still neutral, I merely pleaded for a square deal for the German people and for the election of candidates willing to accord it. I have advocated world peace as a means of breaking down German militarism and consistently opposed everything contrary to the spirit of our institutions. The utterances attributed to me by personal or political enemies, and unwittingly repeated by you, I have refuted long ago in a letter to Senator KING, of which I shall mail you a copy. After reading it I trust you will do me the justice to correct in the same public manner in which they were made the statements which so cruelly misrepresent my attitude.

Signed by Mr. Bartholdt.

Mr. President, in my remarks I did not make any mention of Mr. Bartholdt by name. I stated a certain state of facts and associated them with a former Member of Congress, but I did not mention Mr. Bartholdt's name. In discussing policies I see no necessity of accentuating personality.

But I have not done Mr. Bartholdt an injustice; if an injustice has been done it has been, it seems, by the official bulletin of the German-American Alliance. The statement which I made purporting to come from him was a statement based upon the publication of the association with which he was closely associated, if not a member, and before which he was making an address. I will read the two excerpts upon which I based my remarks:

Just as Europe has fallen upon Germany, so America is now falling upon the German-Americans, or attacking them; but we have a weapon which we can use to good effect, namely, our ballots; and in these days, so dark for Germanism, we must use our ballots for our Germanism.

That was under date of March, 1916. On page 16 of the April number, 1916, this further statement is found coming from the ex-Member of Congress:

We must now forget our party and, without consideration for our previous inclinations and wishes, vote only for those who are the friends of Germanism. We must remind ourselves of our political rights, and exercise them. I give this warning to all who are assembled here to-day, with the hope that they will take this warning to heart.

My statement in the RECORD was as follows:

A man formerly a Member of the American Congress advised the Germans upon a public occasion in a public speech that they should forget all parties and vote only for those who would advance the cause of Germanism and German kultur in America.

I repeat, if an injustice has been done Mr. Bartholdt it is by and through the official bulletin of the association. If he did not make the statement therein contained, his quarrel is with the official bulletin, and I should be very glad if he denies having made that statement to make it a matter of record. If he did make that statement and the statement published is in accordance with his belief, then I not only did him no injustice but I did him a distinct favor in not saying more than I did.

CHANGES OF DRAFT AGE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to the pending military bill. I do so at this time because some arrangements which I have partially completed may make it impossible for me to be here when the bill will be formally reported to the Senate.

In what I have to say I necessarily am obliged to repeat in part certain observations and figures I gave the Senate some three weeks ago in a speech which has not yet been printed, because I have been too busy to even read the copy. I desire to lay before the Senate some facts which, I think, ought to be considered when we come to deliberate upon the military program which involves the drafting of the entire population or deferred classes from 18 to 45, with certain exemptions.

In order that we may know this necessity we must review in absolute cold blood the military situation as it exists to-day.

I desire again to call attention to the fact that many errors have been indulged in by nearly all the people and to some extent by Members of Congress. Constantly the statement is being reiterated, "Surely all the world can whip one country." The great world conflict has been too much regarded as one in which the civilized world is arrayed against the single nation of Germany.

Let us get at the real facts. First, a declaration of war amounts to nothing. The only thing that counts in war is the men and the metal that are actually put upon the fighting line. Declarations of war not transmuted into men and metal are mere scraps of paper, utterly useless. The number of nations that have declared war does not count. The nations actually engaged in the war alone are to be considered.

Second, I observe that there was never any greater mistake made than that we are fighting one country. The Empire of Germany itself comprises several kingdoms and altogether embraces some 26 different countries amalgamated under one central government. Austria embraces some 18 different nations or principalities, and is itself composed of two great kingdoms—Austria and Hungary.

In addition to this, we are confronted by Bulgaria and by Turkey, so that the population of our enemies is as follows:

Germany	68,000,000
Austria-Hungary	53,000,000
Turkey	21,200,000
Bulgaria	4,800,000
A total of	147,000,000

Bear in mind that every one of the men of these countries is a trained soldier. Remember that Germany more than 20 years ago began sending her military experts to educate and discipline the Turkish Army. She has transformed the Turkish Army from a frenzied mob, which broke upon the English squares or the bayonets of other civilized soldiery, into an army that seems to be quite as capable as European troops.

Bulgaria has also been similarly trained. Twenty years before this war broke upon us these nations had been disciplined and in preparation for the war and had been armed to the teeth by German military masters. Thus we find in one solid body an aggregate population of 147,000,000 people, occupying the richest portions of Europe and a part of Asia.

In addition to the advantage referred to remember that every railroad built in Germany for the past 50 years has been constructed with reference to this war. I do not mean to say that the German masters knew that this particular war would come at this time, but I do mean to say that their railroads were built with reference to the wars which Germany planned would come when the opportune moment arrived for her to attempt to forward her plan of world conquest.

Accordingly, our enemies are able to move not only their armies but their supplies from one part of their territory to another with the least possible loss of time. This enables them to utilize their force to the maximum. How much advantage that may be will be understood when attention is called to the fact that in the first and second of the great German drives this year the British and French lines were broken simply because they were unable to bring forward reserves quick enough, a thing which would have probably been accomplished if the railways of France had been built with reference to battle lines, as they were in Germany.

On top of this they had all the ordnance necessary. The difficulty of creating ordnance will be understood when I say to you that it takes over two years of time to produce the factories and to produce certain great guns necessary in modern warfare.

Such, Mr. President, is the enemy we confront. Let us consider the forces with which we can meet this great military power. Here I am compelled to draw a sharp line between the total population of the allied nations or the nations who declared war and the population of those nations which are immediately contiguous to the battle front.

I do this because it is admitted by military experts that it takes ten times the amount of money and expense and labor and energy to transport a million men from the United States to the battle line of France as it would to assemble upon the battle line the same number of men living in France.

I have given the population of the central powers. What have we to oppose to them? The only country that is immediately in touch with the great field of military operations is France, with a total population of 40,000,000 people. Forty million against 147,000,000! Close to them are England, Ireland, and Scotland. But the United Kingdom contains only 46,000,000. So we have a total of 82,000,000 people contiguous to the battle line or upon the battle line to confront 147,000,000.

I do not in these figures include Italy. That country has a population of 36,000,000. I do omit Italy because she has a front of her own to maintain, and because at this time, notwithstanding the great number of her soldiers, upon that front English and French and American regiments are necessarily there maintained.

I make no further comment upon that fact. I simply mention it, and it is only necessary to mention it to Senators that its importance may be understood.

In addition to these troops or these peoples that are close at hand, and therefore can be moved quickly, we have Australia and New Zealand and Canada and certain other British and French possessions, but they are thousands of miles away and men and supplies must be transported across seas infested by submarines. There remains the population of the United States, but we know the magnitude of our task is multiplied tenfold by our distance from the scene of action. Some of our troops must be carried over 6,000 miles before they reach the scene of the battle. I refer to the troops from our western coast. Others must be carried 3,000 miles. The average haul of men and materials is probably 4,500 miles. The ships had to be created, the shipyards had to be created, the factories and mills to create the materials for the ships and armament had to be created.

In the performance of these gigantic tasks a very large proportion of our male population is necessarily required. The proportion is necessarily very much larger than that would be necessary if we lay contiguous to the battle line or if we had, when we entered the war, been prepared with factories and mills and shipyards.

I have given this comparison of the population in order that it may be made to appear, as the fact is, that even with our present American Army in France it is a very serious question whether the central powers to-day are not able to put upon the battle line more men than the allies. We might as well face these facts.

I called attention to this situation some twelve weeks ago. In my own State an infamous scoundrel, running a newspaper, stated that I had made the statement for the purpose of encouraging the pro-Germans of this country. The kind of encouragement I want to give the Germans is to confront them with an army big enough to compel their unconditional surrender or to destroy them. We will get that kind of an Army when we know how big is the force of our enemy. Only a blind fool and a contemptible coward refuses to look a situation in the face.

Mr. President, the unpleasant picture I have already presented grows darker when we consider the cold facts with regard to what has been accomplished in this war. A little over a year ago Russian armies were moving down into Austria and were threatening Germany. That immense force has been dissipated.

In my opinion, a man is very shortsighted who does not know that in Russia to-day there is a very great menace to us. I have never had any confidence in the Bolsheviki. I have no confidence in any body of men who resort to murder and who destroy the established rules of society. I regard with pity and also with horror the transformation of a nation into a mob. Russia to-day is a great world menace. She may rise from her present unfortunate condition. She may possibly resume her place by the side of our allies, but I look for nothing of the kind. Let us calmly examine what the Germans have done. Let us have courage enough to look the situation in the face. The figures I give you are not official, but they are the next thing to being official.

What has Germany accomplished thus far in the war? She has overrun and subjugated all of Belgium, with an area of 11,000 square miles and a normal population of 7,500,000. She had taken of northern France before the May drive 8,400 square miles, with a normal population of 2,700,000; of Italy, 4,890 square miles, with a normal population of 1,400,000; of Serbia, 34,000 square miles, with a normal population of 4,000,000; little Montenegro was overrun, and her area of 5,630 square miles occupied, and her population of 520,000 were brought into a condition of practical slavery. Roumania, with 54,000 square miles of territory and a population of 7,600,000, has been obliged substantially to accept the German yoke.

In Russia at the time these figures were handed to me by an official there had been then taken 311,000 square miles of territory, with a normal population of 46,000,000.

There are included in these areas over 19,000 miles of railway. In northern France Germany has control of the best coal lands. She, in fact, controls 58 per cent of the entire coal production of France; 78 per cent of its coke production is likewise in the hands of the enemy.

The great majority of French sugar refineries are also within the occupied district. The occupied territory also comprises important manufacturing areas.

In Italy the central powers have gained possession of many large mills and warehouses. In Serbia she gained important copper mines and a coal production which is estimated at from 30,000 to 40,000 tons annually. In Roumania Germany controls vast petroleum fields. These oil wells were partly destroyed prior to the German occupation, but are now being gradually restored to the prewar production of about 1,800,000 tons.

Mr. President, Germany has practically made all of this conquered territory either her own or has made it tributary. She has compelled it and will continue to compel it to contribute to the economic power of Germany. We shall be fortunate if she does not call upon these people, and call successfully, for man power to work her mines and work her fields. She may even force them to serve in her army and navy.

Besides this Germany has captured practically all of the Russian ordnance. It is the lamentable fact that to-day British and Americans and Frenchmen are being slaughtered with cannon that were made in Japan or in Great Britain or in France. These cannon had been furnished to Russia and were practically turned over to the German Army.

An enormous loss of guns also occurred in the Italian disaster, and those guns are now being served by German soldiers.

This is not a pleasant picture, but it is a true one. It is not overcolored. It is, in fact, underdrawn.

Under circumstances such as this we find ourselves in this war with the forces upon the western front almost equally divided, England and France gallantly fighting, but both these nations more or less are war weary. They will, I am sure, never grow so weary they will cease to fight with that high spirit and gallantry which has hitherto characterized them. But in the conflict at this stage the United States finds itself with practically a million and a half of our troops already upon French soil. There is therefore no withdrawal, if we had any spirit to withdraw. Remember, that if there is a disaster in Europe we have 1,500,000 of our men there without any means of getting them back. Not only is the die cast, not only is the Rubicon crossed, but the die is irrevocably cast. We must either win this war or we must suffer a national humiliation and disgrace that will arrest our progress for at least a century of time.

Under such conditions what is our duty? Shall we allow the million and a half of our troops—and there must be substantially that many there now—to be jeopardized and to be fed one by one or company by company and regiment by regiment to this Moloch of war? Shall we allow them to be gradually cut down, and by a force that is equal or superior, or shall we amass upon the European front an irresistible force—a force that can break the strength of the German legions and do it quickly and do it with a minimum loss of life and of limb and with as small expense as possible?

It seems to me we are very much in the situation of the people of a city being consumed in a great conflagration. By making a supreme sacrifice, by calling on all the forces that can be gotten together, by expending large sums of money at once they can stop the march of the flames; but if they go slowly, moderately, and conservatively, the fire will eat up the city, and they will lose all. Perhaps that is not a very fortunate illustration, yet it will convey my thought.

It is my judgment, and I think it is the judgment of you all, that if we can get an irresistible force upon the other shore then this war will be short and there will be a great saving of bloodshed and of life and of misery. That brings us, then, to the question of how that irresistible force is to be created.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wonder if the Senator has seen an article in the National Review of London for July, 1918, by Mr. André Chéradame, a great French writer, on subjects connected with the matter the Senator is now discussing. He gives even a more gloomy picture of the situation than the Senator has done. I think the writer's warning here is very timely indeed. He has given to the situation a most critical study both upon the ground and in other countries.

He estimates that Germany can mobilize in 1918 and 1919, 28,000,000 soldiers, as compared with 20,000,000 which the allies can confront them with. These are taken from German Provinces and from the vassal nations that Germany now controls. So he makes the estimate even greater than does the Senator.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad if the Senator sees fit to put that statement into the RECORD.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well. I will ask not that the whole article be printed but merely the writer's conclusions.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"The figures given above make possible the following conclusions:

"(a) The mobilizable forces in Europe at the disposal of the allies (20,000,000) are numerically greatly inferior to the comprehensive forces of Pan-Germany (28,000,000) and practically equal to the forces of which the German staff can be reasonably sure (19,000,000).

"It is difficult to see how the allies can add to their mobilizable effectives in Europe to any considerable extent. On the other hand, in a few months the Germans will be, perhaps, in a position to make use of fresh troops supplied by Mussulman communities in Russia and Central Asia. Therefore, by carrying on the conflict by means of a purely military strategy, it is probable that the allies will find themselves numerically inferior to the Germans and their allies, as is already the case on the western front.

"(b) But the situation of the allies would be completely transformed if they should, in their turn, like the Germans, resort to the strategy of the political sciences; for it would enable them to exploit to their advantage the tremendous sources of weakness that exist in the very heart of Pan-Germany.

"Indeed, in that case the allies could systematically arm a part of the 14,000,000 anti-Pan-Germans, nonmobilized, in central Pan-Germany and thus bring about an insurrection in the regions traversed by the vital strategic communications of Pan-Germany. Secondly, they could, by means of such insurrections, bring about a state of affairs, both moral and material, which would enable the 8,000,000 troops embodied against their will in the German armies to revolt in their turn.

"Assuming this form of strategy to be adopted, the 19,000,000 Germans and pro-Germans would have to face the hostile action, active or passive, of 20,000,000 allied troops, 8,000,000 of their own troops, in revolt or on strike, and 14,000,000 possible insurgent civilians, or 42,000,000 in all.

"(c) The 23,000,000 anti-Pan-Germanist women in Pan-Germany are for the most part compelled to work on the land or in the munition factories. As they represent a by no means negligible force, if the propaganda were effective they could be induced to strike. In fact, in certain districts which I know well the women are capable of playing a very useful part in a revolt.

"Thus, the 19,000,000 Germans and pro-Germans would have to face widely varying but combined hostile forces of 65,000,000 human beings (42,000,000 men and 23,000,000 women).

"To sum up: The purely military strategy leaves 20,000,000 allies face to face with 28,000,000 Germans, pro-Germans, and troops enslaved by them.

"The strategy of the political sciences would transform the situation, for it would subject 19,000,000 Germans and pro-Germans to the submergent action of the endlessly diverse enveloping powers of 65,000,000 persons, of whom 47,000,000 are already in Pan-Germany.

"If the Germans had been in our place, would they not long ago have made use of the anti-German elements in Pan-Germany, considering that in Russia they have derived the enormous profit that we all know from elements favorable to their cause, although they were much less numerous than those utilizable by the allies? Under these conditions can the latter refuse to adopt at last the strategy of the political sciences?

"Far from working to the prejudice of the western front, it would work altogether to its advantage; for nothing could afford greater relief to the allied troops from the terrible pressure that they are having to withstand on that front than an uprising, scientifically organized, for the liberation of central Europe."

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator going to discuss before he closes the very important factor of time in this matter?

Mr. REED. Yes; I have already referred to it, but I shall be glad if the Senator desires to offer any observation on it to yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. The only thing that occurs to me is, of course, we should get our forces there and get them there as quickly as possible. We ought to get them there as speedily as possible, and I wondered if the Senator was going to discuss the element of time.

Mr. REED. I intend simply to make the statement, which it seems to me is perfectly self-evident, that if we are to be of service, then the sooner we get this force there from every consideration the better it will be.

Mr. BORAH. I will say to the Senator frankly what was in my mind. While this tremendous fighting is going on there and the tide is turning our way, the only body which can, so far as this country is concerned, enlarge the fighting force is in recess.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to remind the Senator that the remarks of the Senator from Idaho suggest to me the danger of transporting troops more rapidly than our facilities will enable us to take care of them after they arrive. I quite agree that we must exercise all due haste in increasing our expeditionary forces to France, but we must take heed of our tonnage facilities and the supplies which are necessary to make those men fighters and keep them going after they arrive.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so; but we have yet to call these men in and train them. They ought not to be sent against those veterans in Europe without as much training as it is possible to give them.

Mr. THOMAS. Absolutely. The only idea I wish to convey is this, that our expedition in training and getting soldiers into France should not outrun our capacity of taking care of them after they shall have been embarked.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The remark of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] suggests an inquiry that I should like to make of the Senator from Missouri. About a month ago the Senate, being fully awakened, I think, seeing the necessity of creating an additional army, wanted to put the entire man power of the United States in the hands of the President and give him unlimited authority to increase the Army. We did not do so. Does the Senator know what prevented the action proposed at that time?

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President, I think I can answer that. Several bills were introduced to increase the size of our Army. One I introduced myself. When those bills came before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and the Judge Advocate General appeared before the committee. I placed in the record a summary of what they said, and I placed that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with some remarks I made on this floor, which, as I said, I have never yet allowed to be printed, because I have never had time enough to read them over; but in brief this was the position of the military authorities, the Chief of Staff, and the Secretary of War, namely, that a plan was being worked out to lay before Congress which would give us the kind of an army desired, that it would take some time to work that plan out, and that the desire or hope was that Congress would not act until the military authorities had presented their plan.

That plan they did present, and it is here in the form of a bill, which I think the Military Committee will be able to report out at the next meeting of the Senate. I think I can say that with all deference to the chairman, speaking, perhaps, for him. These eminent military authorities also held to the view that no hiatus would be occasioned by the delay; that is to say, we would have from the old draft a continuous line of recruits going into the concentration camps until the new draft would become effective, and there would be no loss of time. I think that now they are a little anxious to have that time shortened and this bill speeded up, because of certain occurrences that have happened since then. I am not at liberty to go into the reasons in public, although any Senator is perfectly welcome to such knowledge as I happen to possess and which is also known to the other members of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Military Committee will report the bill on Thursday?

Mr. REED. I think we will report it on that date. That is my judgment.

Br. BORAH. That is the bill which the War Department has approved?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It will be ready then, if we have the membership here to go ahead with it?

Mr. REED. I see no reason why we should not be ready.

Mr. BORAH. There is every reason why we should be here then to go ahead with it?

Mr. REED. The Senator can answer the question. He knows as much about it as I do.

Mr. BORAH. Is there any reason why, if the Senate were in session, we would not proceed with its consideration?

Mr. REED. I think that we should proceed at once to the consideration of the bill unless some such important question as woman suffrage, prohibition, or something of that kind is to be taken up to the exclusion of the war program.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senate will come here and be on hand it can dispose of these things before these other matters come up. It is immaterial, it seems to me, whether a mistake of judgment was had here three or four weeks ago, or as to whether or not there would be any hiatus in this program. The question is whether we are ready now to take up the matter if the Senate were in session, and if so the Senate ought to be notified to be here.

Mr. REED. The chairman of the committee is here, and he can make any statement he desires at this time in answer to the inquiry. But I have stated what I believe. Does the Senator from Oregon agree with me? Perhaps I am guilty of temerity in making the statement.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With the Senator's permission, I will say that I hope that the bill will be reported out on Thursday when the Senate convenes, and at that time I will request the Senate to rescind the unanimous-consent agreement, so that the bill may be taken up next Monday and disposed of.

The Senator understands that there must be a quorum here Thursday, and that the unanimous consent of a majority of that quorum must be had before we can go ahead with the measure next week.

Mr. BORAH. I think if the Senators who are absent knew that this bill was going to be reported and that we would be ready to proceed with it, they would be here—certainly a majority of them would be here. I think that the officers of the Senate ought to notify them that we expect them to be here on next Thursday.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. If I could be permitted to conclude my remarks, I think the question under discussion might well then be taken up and disposed of. The few remarks I have to make have been so cut into that I should like to go on. But, of course, I will yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state that last May or June the Senate was ready and anxious to act on an extension of the age limit below 21 and above 31, but we were told by the gentlemen who are now insisting on great expedition that we should cease our efforts, and we did accordingly, as obedient legislators ought to do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, since we have gone this far, let me say a word so as to show matters in their true light: We have had troops up to this time as fast as we had transports, and we will continue under the draft to have troops as fast as we have transports up to about the 1st of October.

If we are to speed up, I think it will be because of additional facilities. That is as far as I want to go in a public statement. The other members of the Military Affairs Committee know why I do not want to be more specific. I am perfectly willing to tell any Senator in private all I happen to know about it. I do not think we have arrived at a point where we need to criticize the War Department because of the postponement of the new draft. Whether the Senate ought to be called together is another question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Before the Senator proceeds, I should like to have him inform us whether or not in the new bill which is proposed there are some provisions essential to the proper working out of the scheme which were not suggested in the various bills and amendments previously submitted to the Senate and whether it has not been well worth while to permit the War Department to formulate this measure in a systematic way and give to it the consideration which it has received.

Mr. REED. I do not think the War Department has wasted time. The only change in the bill that I regard as of real importance is the change in the draft age. I do not think the present law outside of that has been very much changed. However, the War Department did bring to us certain figures which they were preparing in order that they might advise us and might advise themselves as to the number of troops we could maintain and where we would have to get them from. It took some time to get that information.

I will say now that I understand—I think I disclose nothing here that I have not the right to speak of in public—the War Department is going on and having the printing done and every step is being taken upon the assumption that Congress will probably pass the enlarged draft bill substantially as submitted.

Mr. President, I again ask the question, Where are we to get this force from? The chairman of the committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] placed in the RECORD a few days ago figures which show that by enlarging the draft age from 31 to 45 we will get approximately 601,236 men.

That is an astonishingly low figure—astonishing to me. The explanation given is that so many of the men of the country above the age of 31 are engaged in essential employments; that they have reached positions of importance; they are the heads of institutions, or they have become master mechanics, or other skilled workmen, and therefore they can not be withdrawn from the industries. Besides that, a very large number of them come within the married-class exemptions, and, of course, that would help decrease the number.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I will yield in just a second. So we are told that if we are to continue to allow exemptions on the grounds heretofore recognized, all we can obtain from those above the present draft age is 600,000 men, using round numbers. If these figures be accurate, and I somewhat doubt their accuracy, we can not begin to raise the necessary number of men which we must have if we are to create the force necessary to quickly crush the German armies. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The question I want to ask is this: Are those figures based upon the assumption that the present rules of classification will be continued and that the 600,000 or more will be found in Class I?

Mr. REED. They are based upon the idea that these 600,000 will be Class I men. I do not want to be taken as speaking with absolute cocksureness, but I understand they are based upon the assumption that there will be no material change in the present classification.

Mr. CUMMINS. That I may be accurate——

Mr. REED. Will the Senator let me add? It is contended by some, I think, who heard the statement of the Secretary of War that it was meant to exclude all the married men. That, however, was not my understanding.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have given some study to that subject. While I do not challenge the accuracy of the figures at this time, if the census reports may be relied upon there are more than that number of men between 30 and 45 who have no occupation at all or are not engaged in any gainful pursuit. I can hardly think that it is intended to reclassify men so that the mere fact of marriage, if there be no dependency whatever, may exempt a man from military service. I hope that those figures are an underestimate of our man power accessible to us for the enlargement of the Army between 30 and 45.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the question as to whether these figures are based upon an exemption for married men I have answered as well as I am able. It is a question I do not want to speak on positively. The thing that creates a doubt in my mind is the statement that the Secretary of War is alleged to have given out. It appeared in the public press. I doubted that the statement was accurate, but since that time it has appeared in the Official Bulletin, and I am no longer permitted to doubt its accuracy. Of the statement in the Bulletin, purporting to set forth what the Secretary of War states, I will read just the beginning of the last clause:

> The new regulations are not yet drawn. I am inclined to think that the marriage relation will in itself constitute deferred classification. What I want to get in the regulations, if possible, is to have them so that the Government does the selecting, rather than putting it up to the individual.

With the understanding that these figures are correct, it is perfectly manifest that we must get an enormous number of men from some other place. If we can not get them from the ages included in the present law and can not get them from the ages above the present law, then we must get them from the ages below the present law. If we can not get them by raising the draft age we must get them by lowering the draft age. That brings up the question of the boys of 18, 19, and 20. Shall we take them from their homes, from their schools, I had almost said from their mothers' arms? The mere suggestion wrings the heart of every humane and decent man. I do not open my mail a single morning but I read letter after letter from mothers and from fathers of the most touching character. They contain every kind of argument and appeal. A mother writes and tells the story of her struggle as a widow to rear her boy, of his meager educational advantages, and how he has worked and struggled to obtain the little schooling he possesses; how she has put into that one boy's raising all the effort of her life.

Now, it is proposed, just as he is beginning to get a little start in life, to take him from her and put him in the Army. So this mother, from her mother's standpoint, writes me a letter that I could not read with dry eyes. And other parents write. Every Senator's desk, I apprehend, is covered with epistles of the kind I am describing, and the good God, who rules this universe, knows that no man in this body will vote to take these boys except it be in response to the stern call of duty.

A few months ago I did not believe I could ever bring myself to cast such a vote; but, Mr. President, as I have already said, we now have approximately a million and a half of our men in France. Before another five months will have gone by we are certain to have more than a million additional sons of other American mothers over there.

These men are dear to their mothers and to their fathers and to their wives and to their sisters, and they are dear to their country. Their lives are precious beyond any possible language of description. Shall they be sacrificed by being constantly thrown against an equal or a greater force until little by little they are cut down and a vast percentage of them have gone to their death, or shall we now make one herculean effort and put in the field a resistless force that will break the German line at will? Shall we make war feebly, allowing the enemy to maintain his battle front, and if he retreats at all to go slowly, inch by inch, covering each foot of ground with our dead?

These are questions we must ask when we come to cast the votes which will say to the mother, "Give up your 18-year-old boy." "Take your 19-year-old son from his home or from his school and give him to his country." "Take your 20-year-old youth who is just now looking proudly toward the fields of full manhood and yield him to the Army." The reasons must be weighty which warrant us in saying to the mothers of the land, "You must yield these children of your heart before they have yet arrived at man's estate." We can only say it because we are at war, ghastly, horrible war. And in war we must inflict pain to escape a greater agony.

I gain but little satisfaction from the ability to say that I have not been mistaken about this. If Senators will give me the credit of looking back to the debates which preceded the declaration of war, I said then that before we were through with this conflict there would be blood upon the lintels of almost every American home; that our enemies would not break down and quit the conflict because we entered into it; that we would have empty chairs and aching hearts and empty arms all over the United States.

I did not entertain the delusion that some did that this would be a short and easy struggle. I did not believe when we provided for a draft of 500,000 men with the right to call out another 500,000 that that would answer to the demands of this war. And now we are called upon to raise an army of 5,000,000—I use round numbers—to put them upon the battle field and maintain them there and to place upon the sea from 500,000 to 700,000 more of our men and to maintain them there. Ah! I say to you, my America, that you are entering a wine press that is to be filled with a crimson vintage, a wine press that must be trodden with high courage and with dauntless souls. You must prepare for sacrifice and still greater sacrifice. Be not deceived! When by May day next this immense draft of our man power has been withdrawn from our industries; when we shall have nearly 6,000,000 men fighting by land or sea, all of whom must be supported, the women and the boys must enter many vocations that they do not now fill. The tender hands of ladies unaccustomed to toil will go to some task. The pinch will come harder and harder in every part of our land.

Luxuries must be discarded; necessities alone may be hoped for. The arms of America, all her muscle, young and old, must be put to work. Idleness must become, if not a legal crime, a moral offense. Every wheel must be kept turning and youth and age must prepare to play a part. And we will play it well. The soul of America is aroused. Her high spirit is aflame with a holy patriotism. Here at home we will do our best, and yonder on the battle field in crimsoned trenches, on mountain's frozen heights, amidst the slime of swamp, wherever they may be, each American soldier, whether he be an 18-year-old youth with the down of manhood scarcely yet adorning his cheek or whether he be the father of a family, one and all will exhibit that invincible spirit, that high courage, which comes to the freeman. And before their valor the thrones of despots will crumble, the chains of slaves will break, and the battlements of tyranny will fall.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it must not be inferred from my inquiry made of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that I am opposed to a very speedy disposition of the measure enlarging the draft age. I think it ought to be done at once. I believe it to be the duty of the leader upon the other side of the Chamber to notify his associates that they should be here next Thursday. I think it is the duty of the leader, whoever he may be, upon our side to notify the Republican Senators to be here next Thursday, in order that we may, without a moment's delay, take up for consideration the measure that will be reported by the Military Committee.

Notwithstanding this feeling upon my part, I think it is the rankest injustice for the newspapers of the country, which are getting their inspiration from a source that I will not attempt to describe, to lay the fault or the blame of delay in this matter upon Congress. It makes me indignant beyond expression to hear it intimated that Congress has been neglectful of its duty in this respect. More than three months ago, in the place I now occupy, I endeavored to awaken some interest in this matter not only in the Senate, but throughout the country. Every thoughtful person knew then that we must change the draft age in order to bring a greater number of our men within its operation.

More than a month ago there was submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs an amendment to the Army appropriation bill, which I had the honor to present, which did exactly what the present bill proposes. It gave to the President the widest authority with regard to the imposition of the draft upon men between 18 and 45. There was no limitation with regard to his authority in dealing with the subject.

It is no answer to say that the War Department was engaged in preparing plans for the induction of these men into the service. The amendments which were proposed gave to the War Department just that power, gave to the President just that power, and every plan, every suggestion, every arrangement which is possible under the measure that has been introduced by the Senator from Oregon could have been made, and I assume would have been made if some such amendment had been adopted by the Senate.

I do not criticize the War Department for opposing the amendment. I assume that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff and those around him felt that the man force then at the command of the Government was sufficient. I did not think so nor did the Members of the Senate, but in deference to the suggestion of the War Department the Senate declined to adopt the change that was proposed in the draft age, a change which now meets their favor.

I am content with that. I have not one word of disparagement for either the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff, but I do rebel when a situation brought about in that way is made the basis of a condemnation of Congress, and especially of the Senate, for refusing to legislate in a way it wanted to legislate a month ago, and was prevented out of a very proper deference to those who were to be responsible for the conduct of the war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator? I do not know where the inspiration came from that was published in the press, but I do know that in the Senate in the course of the debate it was stated that this survey and plan could not be placed before Congress until some time in September.

Mr. CUMMINS. I so remember, but the survey and plan, if the amendment had been adopted, would not have required the sanction of Congress. It would have been adopted as a part of the administration of the law enlarging the draft age. I realize the imperative necessity of moving in this direction. I am in entire sympathy, not with all the details of the proposed measure but with its purpose. I do hope that those Senators who are here, and especially those to whom have heretofore been delegated the implied authority of arranging matters of legislation, will insist in a proper way that next Thursday a majority of the Senate shall be here, and we can at least then determine whether we can secure the unanimous consent that is necessary to an immediate resumption of business.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am, of course, with all Senators present, very much impressed with the necessity of reconvening the Senate for business. Yet permit me to call attention to the unanimous-consent agreement. Under no circumstances can the Senate do business before next Monday. A reading of the agreement will show the very great necessity of having a quorum here next Thursday. I will read only the last four lines of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will read the entire proviso.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well; I will read the entire proviso:

Provided, however, That whenever before the 22d day of August, 1918, a quorum of the Senate is found to be present, the Senate may, by unanimous consent, vacate this agreement, such action to take effect three days thereafter.

Mr. President, it is obvious that we can not ascertain whether or not a quorum can be present until Thursday. Assuming that a quorum is present on Thursday, which I apprehend will be present, under this unanimous-consent agreement, and assuming that it be vacated, as I have a right to assume it will be vacated, I very much fear we could not do actual business until three days thereafter. So it seems to me there is a very great necessity for the Sergeant at Arms to notify all absent Senators to return, so that on Thursday a quorum may be ascertained to be present. We have that right. Secondly, the proposition will then come before us, Shall the unanimous-consent agreement be vacated? It would require unanimous consent to vacate it. If it were vacated, the Senate could not do business until the following Monday, which would be the 19th day of August.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be a very wise thing for the Sergeant at Arms to notify absent Senators; in other words, if we can have a quorum here on Thursday, I am sure we would gain a week, and it would be time well gained.

With the consent of the Senator from Colorado, I should like to make an inquiry: Under the present unanimous-consent agreement when we do convene on the 26th unless the unanimous-consent agreement is suspended we will be required to take up the prohibition measure. If we can get a quorum here on Thursday, that would give us a whole week before the unanimous-consent agreement as it relates to prohibition would become effective. That is all the more reason, therefore, in my judgment, why a quorum ought to be here next Thursday.

I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I dislike to detain the Senate any longer and would not do so but for the remarks submitted a few moments ago by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

I fully sympathize with the Senator's protest against the charge that Congress is responsible for delay in the mobilization of an adequate army; but, Mr. President, I want to go further and insist that there has been no delay, and consequently the charge should not be made in any direction. We speak very lightly of a force of three or three and a half or four or five million men upon foreign soil, 3,000 miles away, and we are apt to betray impatience if the magnitude of the task does not at once square with the magnitude of effort. Hence, those who are impatient of the slow movements, or what appear to them to be slow movements, are too prone in these days, first, to insist that there has been an unnecessary delay in preparation, and, second, that Congress or some other responsible function of the Government is to blame for it.

Mr. President, when we come down to the cold facts involved in the transportation of a large expeditionary force 3,000 miles across the sea, infested with submarines and subjected to the ordinary perils of ocean travel, it is necessary for the considerate man and for the considerate administration to examine into the magnitude of the task and to prepare for it. When we entered this war every French port of any consequence with the exception of that of Marseille had been turned over to Great Britain, and that country needed every one of them, with all their facilities multiplied several times, for the purpose of enabling it properly to cooperate with the allies and to move troops and supplies across the channel into the territory where the battles were actually raging.

As a result our entrance into the war necessitated the use of other than these ports already so badly congested, and a number, I am not at liberty to say how many, but a large number of ports, very unimportant, some of them, prior to our entrance into the war, together with the port of Marseille, were turned over to our use.

Mr. President, that, of course, was the first step and the first step only. Many of these ports were too shallow and their accommodations too poor to permit the entrance of large transports bearing either cargo or men, and they had to be improved, not only by excavations, but by the building of piers, warehouses, railroads, and other structures. As fast as these have been constructed the movement of our troops and of our supplies has been carried on. Had they been carried on faster, you would have met with serious difficulties, and possibly some of them would have proved disastrous. Had we been less expeditious, then, of course, we should be to blame.

Mr. President, since we entered this war we have constructed railways in France which are the equivalent in mileage of the Erie system. They are equipped with rolling stock partly French, but mostly American, and very efficient. If all the warehouses and other structures which have been erected for the benefit and the use of the Expeditionary Force which we have erected in France were placed end to end they would reach from Washington to Pittsburgh. Even these, Mr. President, have scarcely been more than adequate for the force that we at present have. Our accommodations are increasing. We must support the men across the sea; we must furnish them with food, with clothing, with tents, with medical supplies, with ammunition, with everything that is necessary to make that force effective and to accomplish the purpose for which they have been sent abroad.

Now, I do not propose to go into mathematics very extensively; I do not know that I ought to do so; but I will suggest to the imagination of some of our impatient constituencies if it requires 30 pounds per day as a minimum for the individual soldier which we must transport from America to France, which means 5.3 tons, and we multiply that sum by 3,500,000, and divide the result by the number of days, showing the amount of tonnage that must not only be discharged but evacuated, some idea of the immensity of Uncle Sam's task and of the splendid manner in which he has up to this time performed it will be conveyed to the mind.

We have been expeditious, we have been prompt, so far as our Expeditionary Force is concerned. We have manned it well, we have kept it supplied, and we are willing to do so. The present program comes in logical sequence with the development of our shipping program and all those other necessarily accompanying conditions which must attend every great expeditionary force, which must attend, in fact, armies wherever they are to be utilized, but more so in this instance on account of the distance than any other.

Therefore I protest against the complaint of delay when, in my judgment, there has been none, when we have handled all the troops that our facilities would permit, when these are constantly increasing, so that every month's showing is better than the preceding one, and when we will move in the future as we have moved in the past, and square the performance of our task with the facilities which we now have and which are constantly multiplying for its accomplishment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the question which I asked this morning seems to have been in some respects misunderstood. I assume for the purpose of the question that the program has been a complete one and that we are now logically carrying out the program. It is wholly immaterial to me so far as our present duty is concerned whether there was a mistake in judgment on the part of the War Department or whether the War Department has at all times acted intelligently and has before it a continuous intelligent program. The fact to which I called attention and which I desired to accentuate was this, that the time has arrived in the program when the Senate ought to be here for the purpose of performing its part of the program.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree to that.

Mr. BORAH. It is immaterial why we delay, whether it was wise or unwise. The question now is, Are we prepared to go forward and discharge our part of the task? I want to say that unless others who are in a better position to do so, and upon whom it devolves more properly to do, urge the immediate consideration of this measure as soon as it reaches the Senate next Thursday I shall undertake to do so. If that is any notice to those who are absent, if they desire to be present on that occasion, they can take it as a notice and come. There is no necessity for a jam in legislation or for a conflict with the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I ask whether, in the opinion of the Chair, under the unanimous-consent agreement the Chair could entertain a motion instructing the Sergeant at Arms to notify absent Members that on next Thursday an effort will be made to secure a quorum for the purpose of taking action to cancel the unanimous-consent agreement, and bring the Senate together at an earlier day than fixed in the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that under the unanimous-consent agreement a resolution such as the Senator from Missouri suggests would be the transaction of business, and therefore the Chair is of opinion that it would not be in order. The Chair suggests, however, that in order to meet the situation a resolution might be introduced, which would have to lie on the table, of course, and then it would be notice to absent Senators that they were expected to return.

The Chair will go a little further. The Chair realizes the importance of immediate action on this measure, and if there is no objection on the part of Senators present the Chair will direct the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absent Senators that their presence is desired on next Thursday.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think I can assure the Senator from Missouri that the absent Senators on this side will be notified, and I am advised that immediately steps will be taken on the other side to notify all the absentees to be here next Thursday.

Mr. THOMAS. One of our absentees, our whip, has gone to France.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the morning press announces another attempted meeting of an organiaztion called the National Woman's Party this afternoon, I beg to offer and ask to have introduced into the RECORD a few lines bearing upon that subject prepared by a lady not belonging to that organization but who has been a champion of the cause of woman suffrage all her life.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE HUN.

There are just two kinds of women in this dear land of the free
Who fail to give its President their utmost loyalty.
The women of the Nation march beneath Old Glory's fold,
But the Woman's Party bears a flag that makes the heart run cold;
For when before have women flung a banner to the skies
And made their flag a flaunting rag—a thing of shameless lies?
There are just two kinds of women by whom this might be done—
There's the limelight Woman's Party and—the Daughters of the Hun.

We intern the foreign woman as a danger to our land,
But leave at large to do their worst our own disloyal band.
There's no time to halt and parley while the war clouds darkly lower—
The arch betrayer, Judas, was only false an hour.
The days are very evil and the nights are full of dread,
And every hour adds to the lists of dying and of dead;
And the women of our country are loyal, every one,
Save the Woman's Party women—and the Daughters of the Hun.

In the country's hour of peril, in the time of stress and grief,
We can not serve the Nation and deride the Nation's Chief;
There is but one flag to follow—it's the old Red, White, and Blue—
And under its far-flying folds our cause will still win through;
We do not seek to win that cause by falsehood and deceit,
And when its trait'rous friends pursue the way that means defeat,
We can not help but wonder, when things like this are done,
If the Woman's Party women are—the Daughters of the Hun.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in a colloquy which occurred between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and myself at the last session of the Senate a question was raised as to why the women were asking to put through an amendment to the Federal Constitution granting woman suffrage instead of attempting to amend the constitutions of the States. I referred to the fact that there were several States that had obstructions to the adoption of amendments of their constitutions which made it very burdensome and almost impossible to accomplish that end. The Senator referred to the fact that I had mentioned obstructions in two or three States only, and therefore it was not difficult. I stated at the time that I thought there were some 12 or 15 States with such obstructive provisions. I have now a compilation of the matter by the National Woman Suffrage Association, and I desire to call attention to what these difficulties are.

In the passage of a joint resolution for the adoption by Congress of a constitutional amendment it is necessary that there should be a concurrence upon the part of the Senate and the House by a two-thirds vote in each body, but when such Federal amendment is referred to the legislatures of the States, all that is necessary there is that a majority vote of the house and the senate of such State should concur in the adoption of the amendment. How different it is when a State constitution is to be adopted.

The following States of the Union require a two-thirds or a three-fifths vote in each of the bodies of the legislature in order to adopt a joint resolution to submit to the people a constitutional amendment of that State. They are Alabama, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, and West Virginia. The difficulty of obtaining a two-thirds vote of a legislative body is often insurmountable, even when a majority is favorable.

There are a number of States which require that a joint resolution to submit an amendment to the constitution of the State shall be adopted by the legislature of that State in two consecutive sessions. If the resolution to adopt a constitutional amendment is passed at one session, and at the next session by delay or for any other reason it is not adopted again all the work of the previous session is held for naught. You have got to take the consecutive-sessions adoption only as a rule by which you can submit the matter to the people. Even when adopted by two consecutive legislatures, if the secretary of state fails—as was done in one State—to publish notice of such adoption, the amendment can not be submitted to the people.

There are 11 States which require the adoption by successive legislatures. They are Connecticut, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, New Jersey, North Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Mr. President, it can readily be seen how difficult it is to pass a constitutional amendment in a State where the requirement is not only that the legislature shall adopt by a two-thirds vote the resolution submitting it to the people, but that at the next session of the legislature a similar resolution shall be adopted. The chance of delay in calling up or obtaining consideration of a measure of that kind makes it very easy to defeat a second adoption of the resolution.

In all of these States except Massachusetts and New Jersey the legislature meets biennially, and when we consider that two years have got to elapse before another resolution can be passed it is apparent how disheartening it is to even undertake the difficult task. A few skilled parliamentarians determined to defeat the measure can easily do so.

But that is not the worst feature of it, Mr. President. We find that some legislatures do not meet every two years. The Legislature of Alabama meets only once in four years, and with the requirement of the readoption of the resolution submitting the amendment to the people, you can see that an interval of five, six, or even eight years may elapse before a resolution of that kind could be gotten before the voters.

In some of the States you can not resubmit the question for years. For instance, the amendment can not be resubmitted in Illinois for four years. The amendment can not be resubmitted in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Kentucky for five years, and in Tennessee it can not be resubmitted to the people for six years. So instead of these obstructions to the passage of amendments to the constitutions of the various States being limited only to two or three States, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri, and as being of very little consequence, they are of the utmost importance and they show an almost absolute impossibility of obtaining the passage of those measures through State action.

Now, take the case of Rhode Island. Rhode Island requires a three-fifths majority of the voters. The requirement is that the constitutional amendment when submitted to the people shall be passed by a three-fifths majority instead of a majority which is required in most instances when the vote is by the people.

There are a number of States that fall in the following class that make it very difficult, indeed, to pass a constitutional amendment in those States. They count every vote that is not cast upon the amendment as a vote against the amendment. That is wrong, Mr. President. We know the people do not vote on constitutional amendments in large numbers. They seldom ever cast half as many votes as are cast for the governor of a State in the same election. In fact, I have known of instances where the votes upon a constitutional amendment did not constitute more than one-third of those that had been cast for governor, and yet according to the rule under this class every vote for governor in the State not marked as favorable to the amendment is counted as a negative vote against the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, that is a very serious obstacle. In fact, I can not see how one can get through a constitutional amendment where the law requires that a majority of all the votes cast in an election shall be cast in favor of the constitutional amendment.

Arkansas, Illinois, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, and Oklahoma make that requirement. The usual rule is that the majority of those voting upon the amendment shall determine the question as to whether the amendment has passed or not passed.

It seems to me under those circumstances the obstructions are insurmountable.

Now, in South Carolina and Tennessee they require a majority of the highest number of votes cast for representatives in the legislature. They add up the total votes cast for the legislators, and then if there is not a majority of those votes for it the amendment fails.

Mr. President, in order to win under such circumstances you have to make a paramount issue of the question, and hence it is almost impossible under those circumstances to pass an amendment to the State constitution.

All of these limitations and restrictions were placed there for the purpose of preventing amendments to the constitution.

They were placed in those constitutions deliberately for the purpose of not having the constitution amended, but times are changing and amendments are necessary. The obstructions ought not to be so great as to hamper and prevent the adoption of good and valid amendments.

In New Hampshire the legislature can not submit an amendment to the voters, but this can be done only by a constitutional convention which meets once in seven years.

You can see the difficulties these ladies have been under in attempting to have a constitutional amendment adopted in each of the States of the Union.

In Vermont there can be a constitutional convention but once in 10 years. In many States the calling of such a convention is very difficult. Woman suffrage never has been granted anywhere through the submission of an amendment by a constitutional convention.

New Mexico has the most restrictive provisions of all the constitutions. There you can not even have an amendment to the constitution submitted during the first 25 years of statehood, and then it requires a majority of three-fourths of all who voted on any question or for any candidates at the election, and there must be a favorable vote of two-thirds of these in each county—a provision which is absolutely prohibitive. If opponents concentrate their force against it in one county, that is all that would be necessary to defeat an amendment.

The constitution of Indiana says:

> If a majority of the electors of the State shall vote to ratify an amendment, it shall become a part of the constitution.

How are they to ascertain who are the electors except by a census? The constitution adopted in 1851 has never been amended. Only one amendment at a time can be submitted in Illinois, and to be adopted it must receive a majority of the highest number of votes cast at the election.

In South Carolina after an amendment has been submitted by a two-thirds vote of two legislatures and has received a majority of as many votes as were cast for representatives in the legislature, this body at its next session may nullify the election. What chance is there of getting through a constitutional amendment if there is any protest against it?

This is also the case in Mississippi after an amendment has received a majority of the highest number of votes cast at the election. Woman suffrage by State action in South Carolina and Mississippi would be absolutely impossible.

Mr. President, I see the hour has arrived for adjournment, but I want to call attention to the fact that these are insurmountable objections to our attempt to get equal-suffrage resolutions passed by each house in each State of the Union under the limitations and obstructions prescribed. They are so great that it makes woman suffrage by State action impossible in a large number of the States of the Union.

PROPOSAL TO VACATE UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. REED. I ask permission to offer a resolution, which I think, under the ruling of the Chair, must lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 289), as follows:

> Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to notify all absent Members that on Thursday, August 15, unanimous consent will be asked to vacate the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on the calendar day July 13, 1918.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table, and the Chair expresses the hope that the Associated Press and all other press representatives will take notice of this resolution and give it the widest possible circulation.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE DAVIDSON, OF WISCONSIN.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 8, 1918.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 290) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, August 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 12, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Come, Thou Almighty, with all Thy holy influence and inspire us with a clearer vision, a broader view, a more comprehensive conception of Thee and Thy purposes, that we may meet the crucial test through which we are passing with intelligence, courage, fortitude, and patriotic fervor.

We bless Thee for the signal victory of our Army and their allies, in not only checking but driving back the foes of civilization. Continue thus to guide our generals and encourage their men to deeds of heroism and glory, that the enemy may be finally overcome and brought to a full sense of their cruel undertakings; that truth may vindicate itself, right triumph over wrong, and peace once more reign over the earth; through the principles revealed to us in the Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 8, 1918, was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have had a number of inquiries respecting the water-power bill, and being a member of that special committee I want to inquire what will be the status of that, if it is appropriate to announce it at this time, when Congress convenes next Monday?

The SPEAKER. Of course, the answer depends in each case upon the way the request was made and granted. The order as it appears on the calendar, respecting the water-power bill, is as follows:

On motion of Mr. SIMS, by unanimous consent—

Ordered, That on Tuesday, July 9, 1918, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, it shall be in order to consider the bill S. 1419, the water-power bill; that the same shall be a continuing order until the bill is disposed of: Provided, That same shall not interfere with conference reports, Calendar Wednesday, the business in order on unanimous-consent day, or other privileged business; further, that the House bill reported as a substitute for said Senate bill shall be considered as an original House bill. (Order agreed to July 8, 1918.)

The status of it is this: On Monday next it will have no right of way unless the House voluntarily does away with the Unanimous Consent Calendar and suspension of the rules. On Tuesday it would have the right of way, provided there is no revenue bill or conference report or other privileged matter to be considered. Of course, the revenue bill is a privileged matter, just as an appropriation bill is. Barring those things, it has right of way; but it will not have right of way on Wednesday unless the House does away with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Very well.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker received a telegram from Mr. ZIHLMAN, in which he states that he will not be here to-day. The Chair will construe that into a request to be excused to-day, and, without objection, it will be ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, August 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Northwest Channel, Key West, Fla., with a view to securing a channel 30 feet in depth and of sufficient width from the harbor to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico (H. Doc. No. 1253); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Trent River, N. C., with a view to deepening the channel along that portion of the river known as Foys Flats, and creating a turning basin at the confluence of Mill Creek and Trent River (H. Doc. No. 1254); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 15, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we feel that we join the great multitude of our fellows to-day who are at this moment lifting their hearts to Thee for Thy blessing upon our country and the triumph of our arms. At this time of the world conflict, when we are sending many hundreds of thousands of our brave soldiers across the perilous seas to meet the awful issues involved, we feel that we need Thy guiding hand and the protection of Thy kind providence. O Thou God of battles, Thou God of mercy and of justice, give our leaders wisdom to perform their duties and to guide safely their forces, and give speedy victory to our righteous cause. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CHANGES OF DRAFT AGE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, out of order, I desire to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments the bill (S. 4856) to amend sections 2, 4, and 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 554) thereon. In presenting the report I desire to state to Senators that they will find the bill as amended in its entirety in the report which is laid on the desk of each Senator, and I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD. The bill itself will be printed and presented in the usual form to-morrow.

The report this day submitted by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN is as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4856) to amend sections 2, 4, and 5 of an act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, and for other purposes, report the same back to the Senate with certain amendments with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

"The bill, as amended by the committee, is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens and male persons residing in the United States, not alien enemies, who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 18 and 45, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act: Provided, That the President may draft such persons liable to military service in such sequence of ages and at such time or times as he may prescribe: And provided further, That a citizen or subject of a country neutral in the present war who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be relieved from liability to military service upon his making a declaration, in accordance with such regulations as the President may prescribe, withdrawing his intention to become a citizen of the United States, which shall operate and be held to cancel his declaration of intention to become an American citizen, and he shall forever be debarred from becoming a citizen of the United States.

"2. That the provision of section 4 of said act, 'persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency,' be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Persons engaged in industries, occupations, or employments, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency: Provided, That when any person shall have been placed in a deferred or exempted class for any of the reasons in this paragraph set forth, he shall not be entitled to remain therein unless he shall in good faith continue, while physically able so to do, to work at and follow such occupation, employment, or business, and if he fails so to do he shall again become subject to the draft.

"The President shall make regulations for enforcing this provision.

"3. That section 4 of said act be amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso:

"Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the President, if he deems it advisable, from appointing as a member of the local board any person residing outside the subdivision or area, but within the same State, in which such local board has jurisdiction, or from transferring a member of one local board to another local board outside the subdivision or area, but within the same State, in which such person resides.

"4. That section 5 of said act be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That all male persons between the ages of 18 and 45, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, and upon proclamation by the President or other public notice given by him or by his direction stating the time or times and place or places of any such registration, it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages, except officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, and the National Guard and Naval Militia while in the service of the United States, to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act; and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of any such proclamation or any such other public notice as aforesaid given by the President or by his direction; and any person who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in a district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year and shall thereupon be duly registered: Provided, That in the call of the docket precedence shall be given, in courts trying the same, to the trial of criminal proceedings under this act: Provided further, That persons shall be subject to registration as herein provided who shall have attained their eighteenth birthday and who shall not have attained their forty-sixth birthday on or before the day set for the registration in any such proclamation by the President or any such other public notice given by him or by his direction, and all persons so registered shall be and remain subject to draft into the forces hereby authorized unless exempted or excused therefrom as in this act provided: Provided further, That the President may at such intervals as he may desire from time to time require all male persons who have attained the age of 18 years since the last preceding date of registration and on or before the next date set for registration by proclamation by the President, except such persons as are exempt from registration hereunder, to register in the same manner and subject to the same requirements and liabilities as those previously registered under the terms hereof: And provided further, That in the case of temporary absence from actual place of legal residence of any person liable to registration as provided herein, such registration may be made by mail under regulations prescribed by the President.

"5. The wife of a soldier or sailor serving in the present war shall not be disqualified for any position under the Government because she is a married woman.

"6. Soldiers and sailors, regardless of age, shall, when they are accepted as volunteers or when they shall have been drafted, be eligible to receive commissions in either the Army or Navy. They shall likewise be eligible to admission to officers' schools under such rules and regulations as may be adopted for entrance to such schools, but shall not be barred from or discriminated against on account of age.

"7. Any person under the age of 21 who shall have been accepted as a volunteer or who shall have been drafted and served in the Army or Navy shall be entitled, at the conclusion of the present war, to receive an education at the expense of the United States Government at approved educational institutions. The period of such education shall be equivalent in point of time to the period by him served in the Army and Navy, but shall not exceed two years. Application for such educational privilege shall be made within six months after discharge, and the applicant shall promptly begin his studies after his application shall have been approved.

"Rules and regulations for carrying out this provision shall be promulgated by the President.

"The main purpose of the foregoing bill is to change the present draft ages now established at 21 to 31 years, both inclusive, to 18 and 45, both inclusive. This is the purpose of section 1 of the bill.

"The other changes in the present law are not so fundamental and are really intended to make the present law somewhat more flexible and easier of administration than at present.

"As to the necessity of changing the draft ages, attention is called to brief excerpts from the testimony of Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, Gen. Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff, and to a memorandum addressed to the Chief of Staff by the Provost Marshal General, E. H. Crowder, under date of July 27, 1918, with exhibits thereto attached. These taken together, in the opinion of the committee, warrant the speedy enactment of the bill as it is reported to the Senate.

"The Secretary of War appeared in person before the committee and testified, amongst other things, as follows:

"Secretary of War BAKER. The need for the increase in the age limits is directly the outcome of the determination on the part of the War Department to speed up and also to increase in size the military program.

"After the recess of Congress, the study of the situation went on, and a few days ago it became clear to us that the 80-division program was perhaps the maximum which we could possibly hope to accomplish, and that to accomplish that it would be necessary to change the age limits from the present limits to 18 to 45.

"I asked the Surgeon General for a formal opinion as to the changes he would recommend. In the light of the experience of other countries and our own experience, the Surgeon General independently came out with the suggestion of 18 to 45, so that the Surgeon General's opinion sustains that arrived at by the General Staff.

"The bill as it is written meets with my entire approval.

"Question (by Senator JOHNSON). I find in talking to Members of Congress a decided reluctance to decrease the draft age to 18. I confess to a similar reluctance. I think, however, that those with whom I have talked—and I know this is my personal attitude—are all willing to do it if the military necessities and the exigencies demand and require it. As I understand it, that is the situation?

"Secretary BAKER. That is my belief about it.

"Senator JOHNSON. So, in order to carry out the purposes for which we have entered this war, successfully to prosecute it, this particular measure you deem essential?

"Secretary BAKER. I believe that to be the fact. My own judgment about it originally was that 19 should be the minimum, and I came to the 18 minimum only after very thorough study of the situation, and with some reluctance, but finally believing it to be necessary to secure the appropriate number of men.

"The President's policy is that the United States will concentrate its military efforts on the western front in France, including the Italian frontier as a part of the western front. The theory of the fighting in the future is that we must force the issue and win it on the western front.

"The Chief of Staff likewise appeared in person before the committee and testified with reference to the change in the draft ages as follows:

"Gen. PEYTON C. MARCH. The United States Government has been asked by her allies to embark upon a program so large that it was necessary very carefully to ascertain whether we could go through with it or not, and one of the features of this enlarged program was providing men. The desire of the administration is to establish limits, both maximum and minimum, which will accomplish this program and at the same time disorganize the industries of the country as little as possible. The policy of the War Department is to put the maximum number of men in France with the idea of shortening the war. We found from the figures furnished by the Provost Marshal General that we could embark on a program of 80 divisions in France by June 30, 1919, with 18 divisions at home. These divisions consist of, roughly, 40,000 men to a division. After prolonged study of the available man power of the United States, the Provost Marshal General showed that it was necessary to drop to 18 years of age and go to 45 in order to get the men to carry it through. All of the men obtained under the proposed change in the draft law—approximately 2,300,000—we expect to have in France by June 30, 1919.

"Question (by Senator REED). As a matter of fact, is it not your opinion that it is better for the country, better for the Army, better for the service, to call out these younger classes—that is, the men 18, 19, and 20 years of age—than it is to call out the men 32 and up? Is not that your personal opinion?

"Gen. MARCH. My opinion is unqualifiedly in favor of the young man.

"The young men between 18 and 20 are usually not married; they have not settled down in life; they have not any encumbrances; and they are better off physically.

"The President has finally announced that the American military policy from this time on is centered on the western front and we have declined to be diverted from that one thing. The War Department has now adopted this as a policy, and it is the policy of the United States that the military program is to be centered in France.

"If the ages are changed to 18 to 45, the system of volunteer enlistments in the United States Army disappears.

"The purpose of America is to furnish enough man power to whip the Germans from now on. The only way that Germany can be whipped is by America going into this thing with her whole strength.

"Question (by Senator KIRBY). Then America has got to put enough men over there to whip Germany?

"Gen. MARCH. That is it in a nutshell.

"The authority which was granted the President in this bill gives him the power to call out classes, but does not make it mandatory.

"It is up to us to win the war, and we can win it. How long it will take will depend exactly upon what we do. If we drag along with this thing and put a small force over there, we will be playing Germany's game. It is my belief that with an American army of 4,000,000 men in France under one commander in chief we can go through the German line wherever we please.

"Question (by the Chairman). In order to carry out this program you must have this law?

"Gen. MARCH. Yes. This law will let us lean on class 1 until June 30 of next year.

"We reached the conclusion that the enlarged program was necessary on the 30th day of July.

"The memorandum of the Provost Marshal General, forwarded by him to the Chief of Staff, with an intimate and careful study of the man power of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45, is as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
"Washington, July 27, 1918.

"From: The Provost Marshal General.
"To: Chief of Staff, War Department, Washington, D. C.
"Subject: Changes of draft age.

"1. Pursuant to your memorandum of July 24, transmitting a copy (secret) of the approved military program for 1918–19, and calling for the draft of a proposed bill lowering the draft age to 19 and raising it to 40, I transmit herewith estimates of the effectives obtainable by the enlargement of the draft ages in the shape of three studies covering age groups 32–40 combined with 19–20, 32–45 combined with 19–20, and 32–45 combined with 18–20, and showing the estimated effectives for each combination.

"2. These figures were made by a careful calculation in this office, checking the calculations at various points with experience in the several items represented; the basic figures, viz, the total males of the respective age groups, were ascertained by comparison of reliable insurance actuarial figures with census tables projected to date.

"This explanation is made because the totals shown are considerably below what might have been supposed to be the ample size of the reservoir in the higher ages. The combination ages 32–40 and 19–20 (see study No. 1) designated in your memorandum would yield only a little over a million and a half men (or half a million less than the total amount called for by the program for the nine months, October, 1918–June, 1919). By including age 45 at the top, the second combination (see study No. 2) would yield only a million and three-quarters effectives. By taking the extreme step and adding age 18 at the bottom and including age 45 at the top (see study No. 3) something over two million and one-quarter effectives would be obtained.

"3. This seems to indicate that the bill as drafted should at least provide authority to call into service the extreme age of 45 at the top and 18 at the bottom; and it is accordingly recommended that the draft of a bill be prepared with those ages as the limits.

"4. Furthermore, the authority to draw upon this new reservoir must be obtained immediately. The estimated number of Class I men under the present ages (and including the class of 1918, age 21, that has been registered under the President's proclamation) will be only about 100,000 men (and may fall below that figure) on September 1, 1918, after filling the calls indicated for July and August, and making deductions for the unexpected heavy losses due to a rush in June and July to the Navy, Marine Corps, and Emergency Fleet.

"5. September call: The first question which presents itself is the very urgent one, How to meet the September call for 200,000 men with considerably less than that number in Class I to be drawn upon? There is only one way I can see for accomplishing this, and that is to provide for weekly registration of men becoming 21 since last registration day, June 5, 1918. We could hold such registration, after proper proclamation by the President and upon a bulletin order to boards, designating Monday of each week as registration day, and requiring the necessary personnel to assemble at the headquarters of local boards on that day to effect the registration. The first registration day would be a heavy one, requiring, perhaps, special personnel, but the subsequent weekly registration days should be handled with greater ease. In this way we could hope to get, under a rush procedure, approximately 80,000 men available for the September call, which, added to those remaining in Class I, would give a total barely sufficient to fill the September call.

"6. We must exclude, of course, from consideration in filling the September quota, registrants who become liable to our draft under the British and Canadian treaty, as it is not practicable to have a registration of these men until August 29, 30 days after the ratification of the treaty; and it is not until 30 days thereafter that their right to elect to service with the British and Canadian contingents ceases.

"7. Subsequent calls: The second and more difficult question is, How can we supply, on time, the 150,000 men required for each of the succeeding months of October, November, and December? The British-Canadian treaty would help out to the extent—it is estimated—of about 50,000 men, which is not even the conventional 'drop in the bucket.'

"The House reconvenes on August 19 and the Senate on August 26. How long a period will be consumed in the discussion and enactment of legislation authorizing the extension of the draft ages and in what form such legislation will be enacted it is difficult to anticipate. And yet we must anticipate it if we are to establish as expeditious procedure under it which will produce on time the quotas for the months above stated. If we could assume that the law would be enacted in the remaining days of August, we would have a basis of calculating the results to be obtained under it. As I stated to the Senate Military Committee at its last hearing, a minimum period of 90 days is necessary to enroll and classify all the men registered in the additional classes suggested. We can not therefore wait for the completion of Class I, but must take men irrespective of their order numbers as fast as they find their way into Class I.

"8. I suggest for discussion with the Military Committees of the two Houses the tentative form of bill hereto attached, to the end that we may obtain assurances that the bill will pass in such a form as will permit me to proceed now with the printing of the large number of forms, including the questionnaire, necessary in connection with the additional registration. The Printing Office contemplates a period of 30 days for the printing of the forms, so it is necessary to move with great promptness. Of course, the distribution of the forms can go on during the period of printing, with the assurance that they will not be invalidated by changes in the legislation. Perhaps, also, we could receive assurances that the registration could be enacted by the House in the period following its reconvening, so that it could be taken up promptly by the Senate on August 26 and passed there. This would enable us to contemplate September 5 as a national registration day, and the machinery of the selective draft operating very soon thereafter in grinding out a Class I available for filling October, November, and December contingents.

"Explanation.

"1. Line 1 is taken from Prudential insurance-actuarial tables of July, 1918, compared with census tables projected in this office. The actuarial tables are brought down to date by the actuaries, and the census tables thus brought down at the bureau are not yet available.

"2. Line 2 is taken from same source as line 1.

"3. Line 3 is taken from industrial index ledger sheets for occupational registrants. The ratios there shown are: Class I equals 31 per cent; Classes II to IV, deferred for industry and agriculture only equal 4 per cent. Other deferred classes equal 64 per cent.

"The percentage here taken is the same as for ages 21–30 classification. This is too large, in that many more such men in ages 32–40 would get their exemption on dependency grounds, without invoking industrial or agricultural necessity. But it is too small, in that a larger proportion of men in ages 30–40 would be entitled to such deferment. Hence, these two differences may be estimated to set off each other.

"4. Line 4 represents the corresponding figure for the 1917 draft. These are too low, if anything, as the numbers of State officials, etc., increase in the higher ages.

"5. Line 5 is taken from reports in this office on delinquents, figuring 3.9 per cent of total registration. This would be too high, because the total delinquents include at least some portion of the marrieds; hence 3 per cent is a safer figure.

"7. Line 7 is thus figured: Total enlistments (Army and Navy) to date, 1,400,000; of which those above 30 are estimated at 10 per cent, or 140,000; of these, 120,000 may be estimated to be within ages 32–40; deduct 20,000 marrieds, leaving 100,000 now enlisted; add 50,000 more probable enlistments before liability accrues in the new draft, 150,000.

"8. Line 8 is found thus: In the first registration 13 per cent were aliens; and the census report shows that the percentage of aliens' ages 20–30 and 30–40 or 45 is not substantially different. But many aliens have left the country and 12 per cent is a safer figure. Of these, one-quarter are subjects of Great Britain and Italy, who will presumably become liable and largely available; hence the deduction should be corrected to 9 per cent. This might seem too large, by a considerable factor, because in the 1917 draft only 50 per cent of called aliens obtained exemption on that ground, another 33 per cent obtaining it on other grounds, while 17 per cent of all aliens were certified for service; this would seem to show that in any given number of aliens the net number to be deducted on that ground is nearer to 50 per cent. But as the 33 per cent who were exempted on other grounds are already included under the deferments already deducted, and as the 17 per cent volunteers are likely not to reappear (partly because of the Slavic and Polish Legions, etc.), there should be no reduction of the 9 per cent, which is the figure here taken on line 7.

"Declarants are not deducted; the neutrals being a negligible amount.

"9. Line 9 is based on recent reports in this office.

"11. Line 11 (a) is based on the returns of classification of 1918 showing 10 per cent.

"Line 11 (b) is based on similar figures, which show not quite 20 per cent, including camp rejections. To this must be added 10 per cent for ages 32–40, according to advices from the Surgeon General's office. This gives 30 per cent in all.

"Lines 1 to 5, 8, and 11 are obtained as for ages 19 to 20 in study No. 1.

"Line 9, Emergency Fleet withdrawals for these ages should not be allowed.

"Line 11 is reckoned as for ages 19 to 20 in study No. 1.

"Line 7 is based on The Adjutant General's office estimates of July 26, 1918, as follows:

"1. On account of the present arrangement of records in the several offices it would require the services of some hundred clerks for months to obtain an accurate count of the number of men in the military service of the United States between the ages of 18 and 20. An accurate count can only be had from a study of all enlistment papers in The Adjutant General's office, the Navy Department, and the Marine Corps. An estimate may be made from the actual number of enlistments since January 1, 1917, and the number in this age group in service at the present time is 244,326, of which number 36,549 are estimated to be under 19 and 207,777 are estimated to be of ages 19 to 20.

"2. This estimate has been arrived at in the following manner:

"(a) Enlisted men in the Regular Army and National Guard between 18 and 20.

"The chief clerk of the recruiting department of The Adjutant General's office makes the statement that 'due to the Selective Service Regulations practically all enlistments in the Regular Army and National Guard since January 1, 1918, represent men outside of the draft age, and of these about 70 per cent are under the age.' This estimate was verified by his assistant, who thought that possibly the reenlistments of older men might place as many as 75 per cent below the draft age. Another assistant in the department at First and B Streets estimated between 60 and 70 per cent, so that the average estimate of 70 per cent had been used in this computation. An actual count of current enlistment papers selected at random revealed 80 out of 115 to be below the draft age. The total number of enlistments in the Regular Army during this period was 113,794, which figure it is estimated at about 90 per cent of the combined figures for the Regular Army and National Guard. Therefore the total enlistments in the above would be approximately 126,436. But this figure includes men registered on June 5, 1918, the percentage of which is estimated to be 45 per cent. The net figure, then, for the age group 18–20 is estimated at 69,540. Of these, 15 per cent, or 10,430, are under the age of 19. For the years 1916 and 1917 an average estimate by the same experts divides the enlistments into three age groups by percentages as follows:

	Per cent.
Under 21	27
21–30	57
Over 30	16

"On this basis of the 235,000 enlistments for 1916–17, exclusive of the National Guard, 63,450 would be between 18 and 20. Assuming that as many of these attained the age of 21 by June 5, 1918, as were enlisted during 1916 under age, it is estimated that this figure, 63,450, would be approximately the number of men now in the service enlisted prior to January 1, 1918. No figures for the National Guard are available. Hence the total strength of the Regular Army between 18 and 20 is approximated at 133,000 and under 19 at 19,950.

"(b) Navy: The approximate strength of the Navy and Naval Reserve forces at this time is 400,000 enlisted men, or a little over about half in each. Of the 200,000 men in the Navy proper, very close to 50 per cent are between the ages 21–30. Of the 100,000 men outside of these ages it is estimated that 75 per cent are under and 25 per cent over. In the Navy, then, 75,000 are to-day under 21. Of the 200,000 in the Naval Reserves, between 80 and 88 per cent are within the ages 21–30. Assuming 170,000 to be a fair figure, 30,000 remain, which are equally divided into two age groups—those over 30 and those under 21. Hence the number of men in the naval forces under 21 is approximated at 97,500. Of these it is estimated that 15 per cent, or 14,625, are under the age of 19. The above estimates are furnished by the clerk of the enlisted personnel of the Navy.

"(c) Marine Corps: Total minors enlisted since April 1, 1917, 13,826, or, applying 15 per cent, 1,974 are under 19.

"3. Summarized estimate:

	18-20.	Under 19.	19 and 20.
Army	133,000	19,950	113,050
Navy	97,500	14,625	82,875
Marine Corps	13,826	1,974	11,852
Total	244,326	36,549	207,777

"MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

"JULY 29, 1918.

"Subject: Proposed amendments to selective-service act approved May 18, 1917.

"1. The first amendment brings all male citizens and male persons residing in the United States, not alien enemies, who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 18 and 45, both inclusive, within the terms of the selective-service law.

"It is only necessary to change the ages, inasmuch as males under 21 may, under the laws of the United States, declare their intention to become citizens of the United States.

"2. The second amendment is as follows:

"'Provided, That the President may draft such persons liable to military service in such sequence of ages and at such time or times as he may prescribe.'

"This amendment should be incorporated for the purpose of enabling the President to call, for instance, persons between the ages of 32 and 40 or of the age of 20 before calling persons between the ages of 18 and 19 or between the ages of 40 and 45.

"The amendment makes it possible to call persons by classes as to ages.

"3. The third amendment strikes out the words 'in industries, including agriculture,' and substitutes therefor the words 'in occupations or employments.'

"This amendment is made to the section of the act which provides for the deferred classification or temporary discharge of persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency.

"Experience has shown that some district boards are inclined to give a narrow construction to the word 'industries,' and it is thought that the words 'occupations or employments' should be substituted for 'industries, including agriculture,' not only for the purpose of preventing the difficulties arising by reason of the narrow construction placed upon the word 'industries' but also for the purpose of enabling a somewhat broader construction of the law in view of the fact that the military age is to be increased and a wider latitude should therefore be given to district boards to give deferred classification to persons whose occupations or employments may be found necessary to the maintenance of the national interest.

"4. The fourth amendment is as follows:

"'Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the President, if he deems it advisable, from appointing as a member of a local board any person residing outside the subdivision or area in which such local board has jurisdiction, or from transferring a member of one local board to another local board outside the subdivision or area in which such person resides.'

"This amendment is advisable for the reason that the selective-service act prevents the President from appointing as a member of a local board any person who resides outside the jurisdiction of that board. It has been almost impossible in some districts to find three qualified persons resident in the district to serve as members of the local board. This amendment will remove that difficulty and will also enable a member to be transferred from one local board to another local board in the interest of good administration of the draft law.

"5. The next amendment that needs any explanation is as follows:

"'Provided further, That the President may, at such intervals as he may desire, from time to time require all male persons who have attained the age of 18 years since the last preceding date of registration and on or before the next date set for registration by proclamation by the President, except such persons as are exempt from registration hereunder, to register in the same manner and subject to the same requirements and liabilities as those previously registered under the terms hereof.'

"This amendment is necessary in order to provide for the continued registration of boys as they reach 18 years of age. The selective-service act does not provide for the registration of persons as they reach 21 years of age, and therefore this amendment is necessary.

"E. H. CROWDER,
"Provost Marshal General.

"The action of the committee in reporting the bill herewith is based upon the necessities of the Government in this crisis, and its enactment seems essential to the carrying out of the enlarged military program proposed by this Government in order to enable the United States to play its proper part in the pending struggle and to hasten the end of the pending struggle.

"Objection has been made by some, though that objection is not by any means unanimously concurred in, that young men below the age of 21 ought not to be called into active service. Under ordinary conditions there would be force in the objection, but it must be remembered that in this war, where it may with propriety be said that civilization itself is at stake, sacrifices in blood and treasure are necessary to be made if the allies are to win the war, and the serious question with the committee has been whether the life, social and industrial, of America will be disturbed less by calling out the younger men than by calling out those who are within the deferred classes because of dependency and other reasons which it is unnecessary to state, but which are well understood throughout the country.

"The opinion of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and the Provost Marshal General, together with the necessities of the country, have led the committee to believe that it is better for the successful prosecution of the war to call out those between 18 and 21 and those above 31 and up to and inclusive of those of 45 who are eligible for service than to invade those classes which have been deferred by law and by regulations of the War Department.

"One of the amendments proposed by the committee to section 2 of the bill provides that when any person shall have been placed in a deferred or exempted class for any of the reasons therein set forth, he shall not be entitled to remain therein unless he shall in good faith continue, while physically able so to do, to work at and follow such employment, and if he fails so to do he shall again become subject to the draft. The President is vested with authority to enforce this provision.

"It seems to the committee that in view of the fact we are about to authorize the drafting of the boys between the ages of 18 and 21 years, as well as those above 21 up to and inclusive of 45 years of age, and are providing for the exemption of men between 18 and 45 who are engaged in useful and necessary occupations from actual service in the ranks that when any are exempted solely because their services are more valuable to the Nation in the production of things essential to the prosecution of the war, that when they cease in good faith to follow the essential occupation they ought to be subject to the draft as in other cases. The young man not engaged in these occupations must wear the uniform, enter the ranks, and bare his breast to the weapons of the German Army. He can not refuse to work even for an hour, and he is compelled to fight whether he feels disposed to do so or not. In view of this, when a young man is exempted from the draft solely in order that he may engage in essential industry he ought to continue in that employment in good faith while any grievance he may have is being adjusted by the Industrial Board, and if he fails to do so he ought to be placed in the same category and be subject to draft just as the young man is compelled to do who was not exempted to work in such industry and who has been compelled to go to the battle front to fight for his country. The provision does not pretend to interfere with the right of any man to cease labor whenever it pleases him to do so, but simply says to him that if he does cease he shall, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, subject himself to the draft as though he had not been exempted in the first instance.

"The justice of this provision, the committee believes, will appeal to the good sense and patriotism of the whole country.

"The committee have suggested one or two other amendments to the bill, one of which provides that the wife of a soldier or sailor serving in the present war shall not be disqualified for any position under the Government because she is a married woman. Another is that soldiers and sailors, regardless of age, shall be eligible to receive commissions, either in the Army or Navy, and to admission to officers' schools under proper rules and regulations, removing any disqualification on account of age, and another amendment providing in certain contingencies for the education of young men at the expense of the Government after the conclusion of the present war.

"The reasons for these amendments are suggested by the mere statement of them.

"As amended, the committee recommend that the bill be enacted as speedily as is consistent with its proper consideration."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That we may proceed in the order which has heretofore been outlined I will suggest the absence of a quorum, to the end that we may undertake to revoke the unanimous-consent agreement in accordance with its provisions.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator be willing to withhold that suggestion until routine morning business has been transacted?

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right, with the understanding that nothing but morning business is transacted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, nothing else can be transacted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to proceeding with strictly morning business, but within the morning hour I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum, so that we may proceed to the consideration of this bill not later than Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Oregon withdrawing the suggestion of the absence of a quorum? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has just informed me that he has reported the new draft bill. That bill contains an amendment which in its original form I had the honor of introducing. It is an amendment which, in my judgment, is essential to the efficient service of the Nation.

Shortly after I offered it in committee its purport was given to the country by the press, and the result was that Mr. Samuel Gompers on the 10th of August addressed a letter to me bearing upon the subject. Inasmuch as the letter has appeared in the papers, and I imagine somewhat extensively, and inasmuch as the subject is one of great present importance, I have determined to read into the RECORD Mr. Gompers's letter and my reply to that letter, written on the 12th day of August. I ask unanimous consent for permission to have the letters read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., August 10, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The newspapers have repeatedly published a statement attributed to you that it is your purpose to amend existing law or introduce a new bill to penalize workmen who absent themselves from their employment in war plants. I sincerely trust that no such action will be taken by you or any other Member of Congress.

In my judgment no measure could be enacted with more injurious consequences to continuous production than the enactment of such a measure as indicated. The workmen in the United States are doing their full share of service and duty. They are whole-heartedly supporting the war program; they are giving themselves, their sons, their brothers, and other blood relations on the firing line. They are producing more per man and more in the aggregate than any man or group of men in any other country on the face of the globe. Here and there may be one or a few who may have failed to perform their whole duty, but I submit, sir, to your serious consideration whether, if a bill were enacted into law which all the workers of our country would be justified in interpreting as a reflection upon their services and their loyalty, whether it would not create a reaction most unfavorable to our common purpose in service and in winning the war?

In England, where the most strenuous law now obtains, having provisions which it is said it is your purpose to offer for adoption by our Congress, strikes, cessations of work, have occurred in many instances, more instances than exist in the United States at the present time.

The men of labor of our country are carrying on their work with but the slightest interruption anywhere. They are voluntarily surrendering rights they have enjoyed under the Constitution and the laws and the spirit of our country.

I appeal to you not to attempt to take by the force of law what the men are so generously and patriotically volunteering.

Very respectfully, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

AUGUST 12, 1918.

Hon. SAMUEL GOMPERS,
American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GOMPERS: I am just in receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, which I have read with the attention which the importance of the subject and your high position deserve.

As to the subject, it is one which I have earnestly and seriously considered for some time past. I felt, in common with all citizens, that the mutual agreement between the board and employers, formulated in Washington two or three months ago, in consequence of which the board appointed ex-President Taft at its head, and clothed with ample power would be accepted as a mediator of all differences thereafter to arise and thus obviate resorting to strikes and lockouts during the crisis now confronting us. Indeed I feel that in a large degree the expectations of the country in that respect have been verified.

I fully agree that our production has been large—perhaps larger than ever—and yet I am sure you will agree that it is not as large in some crucial matters of production as it should be, and it is precisely those directions which concern me at the present time.

I read with much interest the President's proclamation to the coal miners in this morning's Washington Post, and with great pleasure your own announcement regarding coal mining differences in my State. Nothing could be finer or more appropriate. But the fact that these announcements are necessary sustains my view that so far as the draft laws affect the individual there should be some legislative expression upon the subject.

Unless my information is all wrong, labor conditions in New Jersey and in New England, vitally affecting the production of indispensable war material, have been very serious, notwithstanding the prevailing scale of wages is far higher than ever before in our history.

It is necessary that we double our forces in France with the utmost expedition. Hence, we are about to authorize the President to take the boys of America over 18 years of age and the men of America over 31 years of age for military service through an extension upward and downward of the draft age limitations, and by common consent we are providing for the exemption of those engaged in useful and necessary occupations from actual service in the ranks. It is because the latter are more serviceable to the Nation in producing the things which the national forces must have that they are permitted to remain at home and enjoy the benefits of extraordinary wages and produce absolutely indispensable material for the Army and Navy.

The boy and the man not engaged in these occupations must wear the uniform, enter the ranks, and bare their breasts to the weapons of the German Army. They can not refuse to work even for an hour, however greatly the urge or the provocation. They must fight and die, if need be.

Now, I think, that man to man, you will agree that if your son is drafted and sent to the front, and my son is to remain in a factory because engaged in a useful occupation, my son owes to your son and to the country the duty of working to the highest degree commensurate with health and the general laws of employment. If he has a grievance it should be cared for by the Industrial Board, pending which his work should continue. If my son refuses, under these circumstances, to work for a consecutive number of days, thus slowing down production and perhaps increasing your son's peril and prolonging the war, he should be held to have waived his exemption and required to go to the front.

Favor and privilege should be unknown as far as possible in this war. We are not by exempting certain classes extending favors to them. We are merely utilizing their peculiar abilities in essentially necessary directions. As long as they are used their exemption should continue. When they are not used, I think it should cease.

In taking this position I do not intentionally reflect upon any body of men, whether organized or not. Taken by and large, your influence and that of your organization, since our entry into this war has been patriotic and commendable, and that fact of itself would seem to justify the legislation which I contemplate in order to round out and perfect a splendid record of patriotism and achievement.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours, CHARLES S. THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when the bill comes up for consideration I shall have something further to say upon the subject.

IRRIGATION PROJECTS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received a letter from Mr. Charles A. Vander Veer, secretary of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, of Phoenix, Ariz., in which he states in part:

A rumor in Phoenix has come to the notice of the board of governors that you have written to the Paradise-Verde irrigation district officials expressing an opinion which in some way they have interpreted to mean that you are giving them your support in the disputed question concerning the building of the Horseshoe Dam on the Verde River.

This subject is one of much importance to several thousand persons in Arizona, and I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD copies of letters written to me upon this subject, together with my replies thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SALT RIVER VALLEY WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION,
Phoenix, Ariz., August 7, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A rumor in Phoenix has come to the notice of the board of governors that you have written to the Paradise-Verde irrigation district officials expressing an opinion which in some way they have interpreted to mean that you are giving them your support in the disputed question concerning the building of the Horseshoe Dam on the Verde River. We feel sure there must be some mistake or misrepresentation in the matter, and if it is possible the board would like to have a copy of your letter or a repetition of the substance of it, if there has been any such communication.

As you are aware, the question of granting the right of way for the building of the Horseshoe Dam is before the Secretary of the Interior for his decision. We believe that the claims of the association should have the preference over those of the irrigation district, and all of our work has been to that end. Trusting to have an early reply, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

CHAS. A. VANDER VEER, Secretary.

AUGUST 14, 1918.

Mr. CHAS. A. VANDER VEER,
Secretary Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR SIR: This in reply to yours of the 7th, in which you advise that "A rumor in Phoenix has come to the notice of the board of governors that you have written to the Paradise-Verde irrigation district officials expressing an opinion which in some way they have interpreted to mean that you are giving them your support in the disputed question concerning the building of the Horseshoe Dam on the Verde River."

This is the first time since I have been in public life that I have paused to pay attention to a "rumor," but the courteous tone of your letter induces me to send you all the correspondence I have upon this subject, to the end that you will be able to see what, if any, foundation there may be for the "rumor." I have therefore caused my secretary to examine all my files on this subject, and I am sending to you the following letters:

1. Copy of letter dated August 31, 1917, from Senator J. E. WATSON, of Indiana, to H. F. A.
2. Copy of my letter transmitting Senator WATSON'S to Director A. P. Davis.
3. Letter of W. R. King, chief counsel Reclamation Service, replying to Senator WATSON'S letter.
4. Letter of Director A. P. Davis, also replying to Senator WATSON'S letter.
5. Letter from Mr. W. I. Lively, president Paradise-Verde project, inclosing copy of a letter from Mr. Sturtevant to Secretary Lane.
6. Copy of letter from Mr. Sturtevant to Secretary Lane.
7. Copy of letter written by H. F. A. to Mr. W. I. Lively.

This constitutes (so my secretary advises me, and he is an accurate gentleman) all the correspondence I have had upon this subject.

Some months ago a delegation of citizens representing the Paradise-Verde Water Users' Association met with the Arizona delegation here and a conference was had, but according to my remembrance of the discussions that took place at the conference, it was understood, by the Arizona delegation at least, that the Paradise-Verde Water Users' Association contemplated taking no action that would in any way injure the legal rights of the Salt River Valley Association.

Permit me to suggest that the board of governors read all the inclosed correspondence, and if it should be ascertained to be practicable, I wish you would have the entire correspondence published in one of your local papers.

Please be so kind as to return the correspondence after you have finished with same.

Respectfully, yours, HENRY F. ASHURST.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE,
August 31, 1917.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Mr. George W. Sturtevant, an engineer "from all parts of the country," and who has done a very great deal of engineering and supervising work in Indiana, is interested in the Paradise-Verde irrigation project north of Phoenix, Ariz.

Sturvetant is the engineer that surveyed the water line from Prescott to the Del Reo Springs, and you may remember him by that.

The only source of supply for the 75,000-acre project in which he is interested north of Phoenix is the Verde River. He says that the total run-off of the Salt and Verde Rivers amounts to 1,441,500 acre-feet; that there is at present required for the Salt River project 748,000 acre-feet; that it will require to thoroughly irrigate the Paradise-Verde project 300,000 acre-feet, or a total of 1,048,000 acre-feet for both projects.

He says that the Salt River Valley is thoroughly irrigated at this time and requires no further watering, and that therefore there is a loss each year over all that would be required to irrigate both the Salt River project and the Paradise-Verde project of 395,000 acre-feet.

He further says that the Salt River project has available more water than is required for its complete irrigation without the use of any of the Verde waters.

It appears as if the Government opened the Paradise Valley for settlement some time since, and over 400 families are in the valley asking the right to store and use Verde River waters as the only source of supply to their valley.

It seems as if the Salt River Valley people refuse to yield the rights to the Verde waters, and if Sturvetant is right this is an unreasonable position, because they already have far more than enough water to accommodate them for all time to come unless Providence withholds rainfall in the future.

These gentlemen are to have a hearing shortly, and I hope that unless there is some peculiar reason why you are interested otherwise you will be able to assist these people.

I never heard of this project until Mr. Sturtevant came to see me to-day. Having known him for many years, I am interested in anything he has in hand.

With kind regards, I am,

Very truly, yours, JAMES E. WATSON.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., September 1, 1917.

Hon. A. P. DAVIS,
Director Reclamation Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DAVIS: I invite your attention to the letter of Senator JAMES E. WATSON, of Indiana, hereto attached, and would ask that you give it your careful attention and write me as to your views thereon.

Yours, truly,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., September 8, 1917.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In the absence of Director Davis, I have received your letter of September 1, inclosing one from Senator WATSON, of Indiana, in regard to the Paradise-Verde irrigation project in Arizona.

Replying temporarily in the director's absence, will say that I attended the hearing before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, referred to in Senator WATSON'S letter. Will further add that during the past three years I have been strongly impressed by the claims made by the people in Paradise Valley. It occurs to me that the people in the Salt River Valley should not oppose the people in Paradise Valley using the surplus water and thereby enabling the several hundred people in that section permanently to build up homes and thus add to the happiness and prosperity of your State.

Director Davis will be home in a day or two, and I am accordingly referring your letter to him.

Sincerely, yours, WM. R. KING.
Acting Director and Chief Counsel.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., September 12, 1917.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt in your favor of September 1, inclosing letter from Hon JAMES E. WATSON, dated August 31, to which Judge King made preliminary reply.

The Reclamation Service is, of course, anxious to have the fullest possible development of irrigation opportunities in Arizona, and will lend all proper cooperation to that end.

The Water Users' Association of Salt River Valley appropriated all the flow of the Verde River up to the capacity of their canal system, which is far beyond the ordinary flow of the river, leaving only extraordinary floods still available. With a view to also utilizing these, they have made surveys and taken some other steps, I believe, toward providing storage in the reservoir on the Verde River.

The interest of this association is paramount in this matter, and that of the Government is only incidental, and it is my opinion that the Secretary of the Interior would be favorable to any proper development by whatever interest promised the best use of the water supply. A careful consideration of this question, however, is greatly hampered by the absurd claims that are continually being made by those promoting the so-called Paradise-Verde irrigation project. Among other claims, they claim to own the reservoir site, whereas the records show the title to be in the United States; and though they show no evidence, they continually reiterate this claim. They claim, also, in the letter you have forwarded that "the Salt River Valley is thoroughly irrigated at this time and requires no further watering." On the contrary, there are over 20,000 acres of land to which we have refused to sell water rights that are actually covered by the canals in the Salt River Valley.

Besides this, there are considerable areas that might be covered if there were a water supply and which can be covered very much more cheaply and economically than can the Paradise Valley.

Of course, I am not attempting to dictate where the waters of Arizona shall be used, but merely mention this fact to show the character of the claims that are being made. The matter is primarily for the consideration of the Salt River Water Users' Association, and if the Paradise Valley people desire to store the water, the method of accomplishing this is defined by the laws of the United States and of Arizona.

Very truly, yours,

A. P. DAVIS,
Director and Chief Engineer.

PARADISE-VERDE WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION, (INC.),
Phoenix, Ariz., January 16, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Herewith find copy of letter recently sent to the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. George W. Sturtevant, consulting engineer of the Paradise-Verde project, which explains the attitude and position of the settlers of the Paradise-Verde Valley.

We are organizing an irrigation district, and if the Secretary of the Interior turns over the Verde Dam site to us, as we have requested, we are prepared to build the dams and complete the irrigation project through the irrigation district now being organized and to reclaim 75,000 acres of land additional to the Salt River project.

There are about 500 settlers and owners of land affected, more than 250 families of which are residents at this time, all but one or two of whom have signed the petition for organization of the irrigation district.

We have retained Mr. George W. Sturtevant as our consulting engineer, and Mr. George D. Christy as our legal adviser, and we wish to bespeak your kind offices in rendering us your aid and cooperation in our work and in helping us to secure favorable action from the Secretary of the Interior upon our dam sites and canal rights of way.

We think the inclosed letter will show to you that we do not wish to impair or in any way abridge any of the rights of the Salt River project, as the records of rainfall and run-off for the past 28 years from the Salt and Verde River watersheds show there is ample water available when properly conserved and applied for the full irrigation of both projects.

Thanking you for your kindly and earnest efforts in behalf of the Paradise-Verde project, we remain,

Yours, very truly,

W. I. LIVELY,
President Paradise-Verde Project.

PARADISE-VERDE WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION, (INC.),
Phoenix, Ariz., January 14, 1918.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.:

We have recently had occasion to communicate with a number of Senators and Representatives, asking their favorable consideration of the Chamberlain bill—S. 758.

The many reasons for urging the passage of the bill will be obvious to you upon careful comparison of the provisions of the present Reclamation Service Act with those of the Chamberlain bill.

Records of the Reclamation Service show the following:

(1) Over 9,000,000 acres of unreclaimed land in the semiarid West capable of practical irrigation at costs far below their value when irrigated and ready for crop.

(2) Over 51,000,000 acres of swamp or lowlands in the various States capable of practical drainage at moderate cost per acre.

Proper drainage of some of these lands, such as the entire delta area of the lower Mississippi Valley, will afford effective and permanent solution of the danger from floods by the breaking of levees, especially along the lower Mississippi and for more than 200 miles above New Orleans, and at the same time make safe and available all these millions of acres of unsurpassed fertility for permanent settlement.

Where such dual benefits will result from drainage of lands along navigable streams the costs should be apportioned or prorated between the Government and the lands improved in proportion to respective benefits.

If the provisions of the Chamberlain bill will not permit of financing some of the larger drainage projects where improvement to navigation will result, then this bill should be amended or a separate act be passed to cover such dual-benefit improvements.

The writer was with the committee representing the Paradise-Verde project in the preliminary hearing before the Interior Department in August, 1917, but was unable to remain for the conference with you after the hearing in Mr. Tallman's office at which Judge King and a representative of the Indian Service and engineers of the Land Department were present.

We understand the Salt River project has been declared closed by the Interior Department.

We are also advised that land speculators who own over half of a proposed extended area of 30,000 acres to the Salt River project, acting through officials of that project, are asking the right to build a storage dam at the Horseshoe Dam site on the Verde River, to store a portion of the flood waters of that river for the irrigation of this 30,000 acres of extended area to the Salt River project. They ask this in face of the fact that the use of any considerable portion of the flood waters of the Verde River for the irrigation of any additional acreage to the Salt River project will forever prevent development of the 75,000 acres or more of the Paradise-Verde project, which acreage is now held or actually settled by over 500 families, and who are only awaiting the right to the use of the flood waters and unused portion of the constant flow of the Verde River to put the entire 75,000 acres of the Paradise-Verde project under cultivation.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that the Salt River project has now available ample water, not only for its fixed acreage but for the irrigation of the proposed 30,000 acres of extended area.

Such additional water supply may be made available as follows:

(1) By adding 6 to 10 feet to the height of the Roosevelt Dam.

(2) By the pumpage of underflow waters in the valley immediately adjacent to this 30,000 acres of extended area to the Salt River project.

(3) By draining of water from over 35,000 acres of overirrigated and water-logged lands within the Salt River project.

(4) By lining 6 to 8 miles of main and lateral canals of the Salt River project along stretches where seepage losses are excessive.

(5) By closer regulation of water supply, both to the canal system and to the lands of the Salt River project, thereby preventing the loss and waste of many thousand acre-feet of water annually.

The combined economies and conservation of all water now available to the Salt River project resulting from these five sources will show an aggregate saving to the project of approximately 155,000 acre-feet, which is ample for the irrigation of more than 40,000 acres of additional area to that project.

The construction cost to the Salt River project of the five economies above enumerated will be less than the construction cost of Horseshoe Dam and reservoir; and when installed or completed they will not only meet all the requirements of the Salt River project for a water supply for its proposed extended area, but will at the same time leave available the entire volume of flood waters of the Verde River for the irrigation of 75,000 acres or more of the Paradise-Verde project, thus increasing the productive area of the valley by more than 75,000 acres, and the agricultural wealth of the valley and the State by more than $18,000,000.

It will not be in keeping with the true spirit of conservation of the natural resources of this valley to grant the request of the Salt River project to use a portion of the flood waters of the Verde River for the irrigation of any portion of the Salt River project when this project already has ample water available, in the manner above described, for the full irrigation of its present acreage together with the additional 30,000 acres or more of extended area.

The following is from records of rainfall and run-off of the Salt and Verde Rivers for the 28-year period—1889 to 1916, both inclusive:

	Acre-feet.
Average annual run-off from Salt River	862,383
Average annual run-off from Verde River	577,179
Average combined run-off from both rivers	1,439,179
Water available from Salt River annually for irrigation of the Salt River project	862,383
Water available from normal flow of Verde River for irrigation of Salt River project	81,460
Total water available to Salt River project, exclusive of water pumped from subsurface supplies	943,843
Required for proper irrigation of Salt River project, exclusive of pumped water	748,000
Surplus water which will be wasted if not used for extended area to the project	195,843
Water available from the Verde River for irrigation of Paradise-Verde project in excess of the portion of its normal flow taken by the Salt River project	495,719
Water required for irrigation of Paradise-Verde project	300,000
Surplus water from Paradise-Verde project which will go to waste if not used on extended area of this project	195,719
Reservoir capacity now available to Salt River project	1,367,305
Storage reservoir capacity per acre of this project	7.3
Reservoir capacity available to Paradise-Verde project:
From Horseshoe Reservoir	275,000
From Camp Verde Reservoir	523,655
Total reservoir capacity	798,655
Storage reservoir capacity per acre of this project	10.6

Surveys of the Camp Verde Reservoir and dam site were completed early in January, and the maps, estimates, and report supplementary to those submitted for the preliminary hearing in August, 1917, will be ready to submit for final hearing before the department as soon as the Paradise-Verde irrigation district is formed, which will be on or before February 20.

There is ample water supply from the Salt and Verde River watersheds, exclusive of the underflow waters in portions of the Salt River Valley, to irrigate over 275,000 acres.

The two reservoir sites above referred to on the Verde River (Horseshoe and Camp Verde sites) will have a combined capacity of nearly 800,000 acre-feet.

This reservoir capacity on the Verde River will make available practically the entire run-off of this watershed for the Paradise-Verde project.

We feel it is the purpose and policy of the Interior Department to so direct all irrigation projects as to secure the largest benefits possible from each and every available source of water supply.

In view of the ample water supply available from the combined watersheds of the Salt and Verde Rivers, we regret that provision was not made under the Reclamation Service act for the joint and concurrent development of the Salt River and Paradise-Verde projects.

This vast acreage of the Salt and Paradise-Verde projects is contiguous territory and should be organized, developed, and administered to the mutual benefit of the two projects.

Should the department desire a water supply for the irrigation of any portion or all of the lands of the Indian reservation lying north of the Arizona Canal and under the Paradise-Verde Canal system, the construction of the Horseshoe and Camp Verde Reservoir dams will afford ample water supply for any of these reservation lands in addition to the proposed acreage of the Paradise-Verde project.

Organization of the Paradise-Verde irrigation district will be completed on or before February 1, and officers will be elected before February 20, when the district organization will succeed to all the rights of the Paradise-Verde Water Users' Association.

Members of the Paradise-Verde Water Users' Association are much interested in the passage of the Chamberlain bill (S. 758), and as soon as the right is secured to them to construct the Horseshoe and Camp Verde Reservoir dams for the real conservation of the Verde waters the Paradise-Verde irrigation district, as successor to the Paradise-Verde Water Users' Association, will gladly avail itself of the privilege of financing under the terms of that act.

In the event the Chamberlain bill is not passed, or that the bill passes and we are not able to secure funds thereunder, the project can and will be financed with private capital, and the association has already taken the matter up and has been assured by responsible persons that the bonds will be taken up and funds furnished therefor sufficient to complete the project.

Financing under the Chamberlain bill would be much more satisfactory and economical, as it would save possible discount on securities and insure greater freedom in contracting construction.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. W. STURTEVANT,
Consulting Engineer.

JANUARY 21, 1918.

Mr. WILLIAM J. LIVELY,
President Paradise-Verde Water Users' Association,
Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR MR. LIVELY: This in reply to yours of the 16th, in which you hand me copy of letter forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. George W. Sturtevant, chief engineer of the Paradise-Verde project. I note you have retained Mr. Sturtevant as your consulting engineer and Mr. Christy as your legal adviser.

I have a high opinion of the capabilities and general good character of both Mr. Sturtevant and Mr. Christy, and you are assured that if there be any way in which I can properly serve your interests I shall be glad to do so. I note from the last paragraph of your letter that you believe your letter to the Secretary of the Interior fully demonstrates that your water-users' association does not seek or wish to impair or diminish in any way the rights of the Salt River project.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

REPORT ON MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. BORAH. I offer for the consideration of the Committee on Printing a summary of the report of the Federal Trade Commission on the meat-packing industry, and I ask that it may be made a Senate document, in case the committee finds it proper to make it such.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

A bill (S. 4869) granting an increase of pension to William F. Blanchard (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4870) granting an increase of pension to Mary Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

THANKS TO THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask that the Secretary may read. I desire to state that as the Senate may be ready for business on Monday I shall call up the joint resolution as soon as a quorum is present for the transaction of business.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 168) tendering public acknowledgment of gratitude to the Army and Navy of the United States, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress and of the people of the United States are due, and are hereby tendered, to the officers, soldiers, and sailors of the United States Army and Navy for their gallant and arduous service and splendid accomplishments in the present struggle. By their skill, energy, and enthusiasm they have sustained the best traditions of American valor and achievement, and have inspired the world with confidence in the ultimate triumph of those principles of right and justice for the vindication of which we entered the war;

Resolved further, That the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy communicate this resolution in appropriate form to the officers, soldiers, and sailors of the Army and Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [After a pause.] If there be no further morning business, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that we may, if a quorum is present, endeavor to revoke the unanimous-consent agreement, so that we may proceed with the consideration of the Army draft bill promptly next Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Knox	Ransdell
Baird	France	McCumber	Reed
Bankhead	Gore	McKellar	Saulsbury
Borah	Guion	McNary	Shafroth
Brandegee	Hale	Nelson	Sheppard
Calder	Henderson	New	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Thomas
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Trammell
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kellogg	Poindexter	Weeks
Fernald	Kirby	Pomerene

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees, a quorum not being developed.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators only have answered to their names. A quorum not being present, the Chair holds that the unanimous-consent agreement prevails, and, the morning business having been closed, the Senate stands adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 15, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, author of liberty, truth, justice, mercy, faith, hope, love, we praise Thy holy name for these qualities of soul which in their development lead on to individual perfection, the goal of life, and which unite kindred souls into homes, nations, and in times of distress make the whole world akin.

Never was there a time in the history of the world when greater value was placed upon these precious qualities.

We thank Thee for the men and women who have and are placing their names high on the roll of honor by deeds of heroism and sacrifice. The Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, and similar organizations for the alleviation of suffering prove the ascendency of good over evil and promise its final victory.

Help us to fight on, pray on, the battle ne'er give o'er, until the final goal shall have been reached; and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, August 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4471) to declare unlawful associations purposing by physical force, violence, or injury to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change in the United States, and prescribing punishment for persons engaged in the activities of such associations, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 758), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 12765) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12766) to provide surgical or medical treatment for the men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard who have been honorably discharged from the service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KEATING: A bill (H. R. 12767) to provide for the national security and defense by prohibiting child labor during the period of the war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. McLEMORE: A bill (H. R. 12768) requiring the filing of copies of all contracts for services rendered or materials furnished to the United States or certain contractors and agencies of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TREADWAY: A bill (H. R. 12769) relative to fees for claim agents; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 12770) to reserve as a part of the Oregon and Siuslaw National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. RAKER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 318) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged, and until midnight of December 31 of the year following that in which such war is concluded; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GARD: A bill (H. R. 12771) granting an increase of pension to George A. Coyer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12772) granting a pension to Josephine J. Teeter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of John R. Palmer, of Normal, Ill., urging the passage of the volunteer officers' retirement bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH: Papers in support of House bill 12754, granting a special pension to George Harshman, crippled and helpless son of Ezekiel Harshman, late of Company G, One hundred and first Indiana Volunteer Infantry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of H. J. Ralston, president Ralston Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal., protesting against 20 per cent tax on truck attachments and trailers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Papers to accompany House bill 12761, to pension Thomas B. Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of several firms in the United States against prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 19, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, as we come before Thee at the beginning of this session our hearts are saddened because of the going away of one of the lofty men of our national life—a man who has lived among us with unsullied character; who has borne himself with the dignity of a Senator, with the honor of a man, with the grace of a Christian; whose counsel was wise; whose chaste spirit has refined the spirit of the Nation. We bless Thee for his life and character and ministry among us.

We pray that we may feel an added sense of responsibility as these men who have been tried through the years are taken from us, and that we may, by the grace of God, measure up to the ever-increasing responsibilities of this high office.

Hear us in our prayer; direct us to-day in the affairs that may confront us; help us to solve our national problems in the fear of God; and bring us to ultimate victory and success. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McNary	Shafroth
Baird	Gore	Nelson	Sheppard
Bankhead	Guion	New	Sherman
Borah	Hale	Norris	Shields
Brandegee	Henderson	Nugent	Simmons
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Thomas
Cummins	Kendrick	Poindexter	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fall	Kirby	Ransdell	Weeks
Fernald	Knox	Reed	Willfley
Fletcher	McCumber	Robinson
France	McKellar	Saulsbury

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

CHANGES OF DRAFT AGE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in order that the so-called man-power bill, the draft bill that was submitted to the Senate a few days ago, may be taken up on Thursday, I ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent agreement which was adopted some time ago may be vacated, so that the bill in question, Senate bill 4856, may be proceeded with at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the unanimous-consent agreement, under the terms of the last proviso contained therein, is vacated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall ask that the bill be taken up for consideration on Thursday next.

DEATH OF SENATOR GALLINGER.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is my painful duty this morning to announce the death of our late colleague, JACOB H. GALLINGER, the senior Senator from the State of New Hampshire. He passed away from life on the 17th of this month in a sanitarium at Franklin, N. H., in the eighty-second year of his age, after a service of 27 years in this body.

Mr. GALLINGER's death is especially sad and painful to me from the fact that I have been associated with him so long in the public service. We were associates in the House of Representatives in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, and I have been associated with him in this body since the 4th of March, 1895. During a large share of that time we were both members of one of the most important committees of the Senate, and I learned to know the Senator intimately and well. He was one of the most industrious and energetic Members of this body, always vigilant and active in the public interest; and he set an example to all of us who served with him, and to those who are coming after us, as one of the most efficient public servants that this country has ever had.

Mr. President, while the late Senator passed away in the fullness of his years, his death is a great loss not only to his State but to our common country and to this body. We shall miss him. He was always active, always vigilant, always attentive to his public duties.

On some future occasion this body no doubt will take proceedings to commemorate in a more full and complete manner his life and his services. On this occasion I shall not take up the time of the Senate further than to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 291) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JACOB HAROLD GALLINGER, for 27 years a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. GALLINGER, to be held in the city of Concord, N. H.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Under the second resolution the President pro tempore appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. BORAH, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WEEKS, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. NEW as the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, August 22, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 19, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in Heaven, our life, our light, our strength, our courage, our fortitude, our hope, our inspiration, freely Thou hast given; may we freely receive of these precious gifts and use them to the furtherance of civilization, and thus to the honor and glory of Thy holy name.

After a brief respite from labors the Congress of the United States has again assembled to take up the arduous duties which rest upon it. Let Thy blessing descend upon all the Members of this House, its Speaker, and all who are connected with it, that with patriotic zeal and renewed fervor they may go forward with the tasks before them and prepare the way for a successful prosecution of the war in which we are engaged.

The flags which float upon this Capitol are again at half-mast, marking the passing away of another of the congressional family.

He will be mourned as a great loss to his country. Wise in his conceptions, strong in his convictions, pure in his motives, a man of great parts; peace to his ashes and rest to his soul. Be with his many friends, colleagues, and kinsfolk to comfort and sustain them in this hour of grief.

May we emulate his virtues and hold sacred his memory and think of him as faring on in the realms of the Great Beyond, in the name of Him who died that we might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 15, 1918, was read and approved.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KITCHIN). The Chair lays before the House the following communication from the Speaker.

The communication was read, as follows:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 16, 1918.

Hon. SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives:

I hereby designate Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN to preside as Speaker Monday, August 19.

Yours, respectfully, CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY and Mr. DOOLITTLE rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] is recognized.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, there are many important matters on the Unanimous Consent Calendar that ought to be disposed of, and many Members are interested in that calendar. Therefore I want to ask unanimous consent to take up to-morrow the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, Mr. Speaker, has the chairman of the Water Power Committee agreed to that?

Mr. SIMS. I have not.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unless it is agreed to all around I hope that will not be done. I feel that not only Calendar Wednesday ought to be vacated, but that this bill ought to be considered until the draft bill and the revenue bill come in. The water-power bill has been hanging here so long, and it has been pressed from every source inside and out of Congress, that to let it be pushed aside for other than the two measures referred to ought not to be done.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] yield for just a second?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. There are a number of important bills in which Members are interested on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and they ought to get on their way.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. We might dispose of Calendar Wednesday and give up to-morrow for the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SIMS. Why, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow be set aside to consider matters on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. I feel the necessity of objecting unless the chairman of the committee wants to do it himself.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FERRIS. I object.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday so that the water-power bill may be completed this week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday in order to take up the water-power bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This being the day when suspension of the rules is in order, would it not be in order for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] to move to suspend the rules and make an order for business to-morrow that is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say that we are waiting now for a resolution from the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would not be in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this being the day set aside for suspension of the rules, of course it is in order for any person, if he gains recognition, to move to suspend the rules and make a special rule for to-morrow, provided two-thirds of the House approve it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When suspension time comes the Chair will recognize anyone to suspend the rules, after some of the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar has been disposed of, late in the afternoon.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I would like to know what the status of the water-power bill is with reference to consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a continuing order for the water-power bill to be considered if it does not interfere with conference reports, Unanimous Consent Mondays, Calendar Wednesdays, or other privileged matters.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the report of the Federal Trade Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the report of the Federal Trade Commission. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like——

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

RECESS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, we are waiting for a resolution from the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 12.40 p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by Mr. KITCHIN as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, August 17, 1918.

I request leave of absence for one week on account of illness.

B. H. SNELL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this request?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JACOB HAROLD GALLINGER, for 27 years a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. GALLINGER, to be held in the city of Concord, N. H.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

And that in compliance with the foregoing resolutions the President pro tempore had appointed as said committee Mr. LODGE, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. BORAH, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WEEKS, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. NEW.

DEATH OF SENATOR GALLINGER, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Representatives from the State of New Hampshire, I offer the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 424.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JACOB HAROLD GALLINGER, a Senator of the United States from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 14 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, no doubt the Members from New Hampshire will at a later date ask the House to set aside a day for further testimonial in memory of the distinguished Senator, who was formerly a Member of the House of Representatives, who has just died.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will announce the names of the members of the committee on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WASON, Mr. BURROUGHS, Mr. GILLETT, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. OLNEY, Mr. GREENE of Vermont, Mr. DALE of Vermont, Mr. GALLAGHER, Mr. POU, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Mr. TIMBERLAKE, and Mr. IGOE.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the additional resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 20, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 20, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast ever been our refuge and our strength, let Thy holy influence be with us, that Thy counsels may prevail in all the legislative acts of these Thy servants, that they may be in consonance with the eternal fitness of things.

Uphold and guide our President and his advisers in this hour of need; grant that our Army and Navy, with their associates, may continue to drive back the enemies of right, truth, and justice; that peace and harmony may fill the hearts of all the world with joy and gladness in Thine own good time; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Also the following communication from the Secretary of the Navy, which was read and ordered to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 14, 1918.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: In response to House resolution No. 390, adopted June 10, 1918, I have the honor to transmit herewith the report requested for the naval service.

I beg leave to call your attention to the fact that the report includes the names of approximately 7,700 men, this figure being 1.8 per cent of the total enlisted strength of the Navy.

It is interesting to note that a large number of the men reported are engaged in inspection work, both cost and material inspection. These duties are required in the interests of the extensive building program going forward and in the manufacture of arms and armament for vessels, for clothing, and for all the munitions of war.

Many of these men were required in the early days of the war, before it was decided, in order to meet pressing needs, to enroll yeowomen to aid in the emergency created by unprecedented preparations in advent of war. On April 9, 1918, I issued directions to replace as many men as could possibly be spared by women, and such replacement has already gone forward to some extent. It is estimated that all men performing the duties which can be performed by women, excepting those, of course, who are employed in places and under circumstances such that women may not be employed to best advantage, will be relieved in the very near future.

This report has been compiled from reports received from over 1,000 individual offices and stations throughout the United States. It has been necessarily delayed by reason of the fact that so many stations had to be heard from, and in the interests of accuracy. The date of the report may be taken as July 1, 1918, and although some changes have undoubtedly occurred since that date, it is not believed that the report is materially affected thereby.

Sincerely,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 10, 1918.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to report to the House of Representatives the number of men (with the name and home address of each) who, on June 5, 1917, were between the ages of 21 and 31 years, and who, since that date, have been commissioned or enlisted either in the active or in any of the Reserve Forces of the Military or Naval Establishments and assigned to clerical work in their respective departments, or in offices elsewhere, where such service is not directly rendered to and as a part of units of the Army and Navy employed in active or field operations, and who have received deferred classification by reason of being already in the military or naval service of the United States.

REPORT OF NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE NAVAL SERVICE ENLISTED OR COMMISSIONED SINCE JUNE 5, 1917, BETWEEN THE AGES OF 21 AND 31 AND ASSIGNED TO CLERICAL DUTIES IN THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT ON SHORE IN OFFICES NOT DIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH UNITS ENGAGED IN FIELD OPERATIONS.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that an order was made that the report (H. Doc. No. 1257) in response to the Madden resolution (H. Res. 372) in so far as the Navy Department is concerned should be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The communication will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BASTILLE DAY (H. DOC. NO. 1256).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 8, 1918.

HON. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a note from the French ambassador, wherein, by instruction of his Government, he asks that both Houses of the Congress of the United States be advised of the feelings of gratification with which the resolutions passed by them on the occasion of July 14, the French national fête day, were received by the Government and by the whole French nation.

A letter similar to this has been addressed to the President of the Senate.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

(1 inclosure: From French ambasador, July 31, 1918.)

EMBASSY OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC TO THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 31, 1918.

HON. FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In accordance with instructions I have received from my Government I take the liberty of asking that you be so good as to inform both Houses of Congress of the feelings of gratification with which the resolutions voted by them on the occasion of the 14th of July were received by the Government and by the whole French nation.

The text of those resolutions evidenced once more that moral kinship existing between two peoples equally ready to fight absolutism, tyranny, injustice, brutality, and whose national fête days, both dating back from Revolutionary times, have the same meaning, which is emancipation.

We hope the end of the present conflict may be not far removed; we know that it will not occur before our common aims have been fully achieved and before what the 4th and 14th of July stand for has been definitely secured—the end of tyranny.

Believe me, dear Mr. Secretary,
Very sincerely, yours,
JUSSERAND.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. VINSON indefinitely, on account of important business.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1419, the water-power bill. Pending that motion I desire to ascertain if we can not come to some agreement in respect to closing general debate. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how much time he has ahead of me. In other words, how much more time have I consumed than has been consumed by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, at the time the House recessed the gentleman from Tennessee had used 4 hours and 33 minutes and I had used 2 hours and 35 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. That accords with my recollection. I ask unanimous consent that general debate close with the adjournment of the House to-day, so that we may begin the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the water-power bill, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that all general debate close with the adjournment of the House to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we ought to include some arrangement whereby the time shall be equalized on both sides.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes; it is understood that the gentleman from Wisconsin is to have two hours more than I.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand; but if we make an arrangement that debate shall close when the House adjourns no one will have any assurance when that time comes that there will have been an equal division of time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, why not modify the request and ask unanimous consent that general debate close at the expiration of two hours, and let the gentleman from Wisconsin consume those two hours, and then have an agreement that upon the mooted question in respect to the recapture clause some time will be granted under the five-minute rule? I do not intend to use any time at all in general debate. Everyone knows that in general debate the Members all leave and no one is here. If the other side requires the two hours, let them use that and close debate and use some time under the five-minute rule to-day.

The SPEAKER. Does the chairman make that request?

Mr. SIMS. I would like to inquire what the gentleman from Wisconsin has to say.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I have requests from members of the committee that would consume more than two hours, which would take, possibly, three hours or three hours and a half.

Mr. SIMS. Then I shall submit this request: That general debate close in three hours and a half and that the gentleman from Wisconsin be entitled to all of that time.

Mr. FERRIS. Debate to be confined to the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, we have tried that two or three times.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if he will not adhere to his original suggestion that debate close with adjournment to-day. A great number of Members are just returning and will not stay in their seats, and to have the bill taken up under the five-minute rule at 4 o'clock would cause a great deal of confusion.

Mr. ESCH. I think that we can agree upon the original proposition of devoting the day to general debate.

Mr. SIMS. Then I submit the request that all general debate upon the bill close with the adjournment of the House to-day, and I hope that that adjournment will not take place before the gentleman from Wisconsin has had opportunity to use all the time that he wishes.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this debate is to be confined to the water-power bill or is to be general debate.

Mr. SIMS. It is general debate on the water-power bill. Perhaps the gentleman was not present, but there was an attempt at the beginning to confine it to the bill, but that was refused.

Mr. ESCH. Let me say that I have no requests for speeches to be made upon any other subject than the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Then why not let that go into the agreement.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I hope that the nature of the general debate will not be limited now. Many of the speeches made on the other side were political speeches.

Mr. SIMS. No more on this side than on that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; there were more speeches made on that side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that general debate close with the adjournment to-day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. SIMS to go into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WEBB in the chair.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it is often stated as an indication of the necessity of legislation which will permit of water-power development that there are more than 60,000,000 potential horsepowers in this country going to waste. This statement is true only in the same sense as the statement that there are millions of tons of coal in the ground unutilized.

The utilization of potential water power is not presently limited by the supply but by other factors which likewise affect the utilization of any other similar resource. These factors, broadly, are (1) the available and prospective markets and (2) the investment and operation cost per horsepower in comparison with other power means.

In the case of water power there is still another limiting factor. About three-fourths of the potential undeveloped water powers are located on the public domain and in navigable streams. They are therefore subject to Federal control and can be developed only with the consent of Congress.

In this bill we are concerned with the terms under which this development shall be allowed to proceed. These terms are of the utmost importance and observe the most careful and painstaking consideration, for once fixed they are, as to those powers for which licenses are given, unchangeable.

It is claimed that the quickest and the largest development can be secured by turning over these powers to unrestricted private ownership. However much truth there may be in this claim, it is unthinkable that this last governmentally owned natural resource should now be turned over to unrestricted private exploitation.

At the other extreme are those who would have all the water-power sites of the country developed, owned, and operated by the Federal Government. Aside from the advantages or the disadvantages which might be urged against Government operation of water powers, as well as with reference to other public utilities, it is altogether unlikely that the Government will find itself in position either now or in the period immediately following the war to undertake as a governmental activity the development and operation of water-power plants.

The present bill represents a scheme of development between these two extremes, and contemplates development by private capital under leases of 50 years, which will reserve to the Government the right to supervision of operation and rates and provide for the recapture of the property on the expiration of the license period.

Development by private capital under these conditions is possible only if the terms of the license offer reasonable certainty that the developer will be permitted to earn a reasonable rate upon investment and the assurance that if the Government takes over the property at the end of the period under the right of recapture that the actual original and new capital invested will be returned to the investor.

The committee has endeavored in this bill to meet both of these requirements and at the same time preserve to the Government and to the people every right of regulation, control, and recapture.

Again, it is claimed by those who insist upon the policy of unrestricted private development that the regulation of rates by State and Federal commissions insures to the public every right to which it is entitled, and which is at the same time consistent with the idea of private development. With this claim I do not agree.

In fixing the rates to be charged by hydroelectric concerns the same difficulties are encountered as have been met in the attempts during the war to fix the price of commodities. The hydroelectric resources of a region are seldom sufficient to supply the power requirements of the community situated within the radius of efficient transmission. In other words, hydroelectric power is ordinarily sold in competition with steam power. High-cost power concerns are competing in the same community with low-cost power concerns. To illustrate, a rate which would permit a high-cost concern to live would return a very large profit to a low-cost concern, while a rate which would reduce the profits of a low-cost concern to a reasonable return would put a high-cost concern or a steam concern out of business.

These facts make it impossible to lay down a uniform rule as a matter of legislation fixing a basis of either rates or profits and illustrate the inefficiency and ineffectiveness of rate regulation as a means of curtailing profit.

In order to meet this situation the committee has provided in this bill that the license may contain provisions requiring the use of the surplus earnings in excess of the amount set aside for depreciation, renewals and replacements, and a reasonable net return in amortization or in rebating charges to consumers. The bill in these respects is sufficiently flexible to meet any situation which may arise.

I come now to the discussion of that feature of the bill around which most of the controversy centers. This is the basis of recapture, which determines the amount which must be paid by the Government or a new licensee in case the property is taken over or leased to a new licensee at the end of the license period.

The basis heretofore adopted has always been unsatisfactory because of its indefiniteness both at the time of issuing the license and at its expiration. The committee has adopted a basis of recapture which we think is scientific and so susceptible of definite interpretation as to be in the interest of both the investor and the Government. This is the so-called "net-investment" plan.

This plan contemplates the return to the investor, in case of recapture, of the actual original cost of the project less credit balances accrued in depreciation account, unappropriated surplus, and the amount set aside for amortization.

In order to properly safeguard the interests of the Government in determining the elements entering into the various cost factors the bill provides that the commission may require the licensee to keep a system of accounts in accordance with the direction of the commission; that the commission shall have the right to examine books of the licensee at all times; to require reports and statements of assets, liabilities, capitalization, cost of project, cost of operation, and the production, transmission, use, and sale of power. The commission is also authorized to hold hearings and take testimony.

In addition, the licensee is required by the terms of the license to maintain the project works in a condition of repair adequate for the efficient operation of the same, to make all necessary renewals and replacements, to maintain adequate depreciation reserves, and to amortize the cost of the project in the event he earns a return in excess of a specified return stated in the license. The licensee is further required to operate and maintain the plant at the full capacity of the available market for the full term of the lease.

The advantages of this plan lie principally in the facility which it gives for governmental control and for the scientific ascertainment of the actual cost of the plant as a basis of recapture.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] opposes this plan in a minority report so misleading in its statement and so full of vicious innuendo that it is difficult to believe that the report could have been conceived in the mind of the gentleman from Oklahoma, who should know and does know a great deal about the questions and facts involved.

As a substitute for the plan proposed by the committee, he proposes a plan the only virtue of which is that it has been four times adopted by the House because no better or more scientific plan was proposed. If his plan has any virtue he has utterly failed to make it apparent in the minority report.

He proposes to make the basis of recapture the fair value of the property at the time it is taken over. This basis is at best entirely vague and indefinite both as to the Government and the owner of the plant. Its very vagueness is as charming as its simplicity is complex and uncertain. Taken alone, it affords no assurance whatever that the owner will not be required to take less than his plant is worth or that the Government will not be required to pay more than the plant is worth, and this can only be justified on the ground that no more scientific or definite plan can be offered.

It should be stated that the amount represented by fair value under his proposal is limited by the qualification that the fair value as ascertained shall not exceed original cost. This limitation, however, is valueless at the end of the license period unless the accounts of the lincesee have been kept upon the net-investment plan, which would permit of the determination of the original cost.

Singularly enough, original cost in the mind of the gentleman from Oklahoma has virtues when applied as a limitation at the end of 50 years, but is utterly vicious when scientifically applied concurrently with the acquirement of the items comprising the cost.

His plan, if adopted, would require not only the payment to the investor of the full market value of his property, including every item which might be considered in a condemnation proceeding, except the unearned increment in lands and rights of way and the value of good will, prospective revenues, and the license granted by the Government, and in addition thereto the return of the amounts in the depreciation funds, unappropriated surplus, and the amount set apart for amortization.

If the project had been completely amortized at the end of 50 years the investor would receive under the plan proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma the entire amount which he would receive under the net investment plan and in addition thereto the full market value of the property.

I wish now to direct the attention of the committee to the minority report of the gentleman from Oklahoma. The gentleman from Oklahoma says:

In this latter contention—

That the method of recapture should be made so onerous, ponderous, and difficult that neither the Government, State, county, nor municipality would be justified in actually retaking it—by the net-investment amendment, which was not in the administration bill, they have succeeded and have secured precisely what they wanted. It has been accomplished by an amendment added to the administration bill in the Water Power Committee, and known and referred to as the so-called "net-investment amendment." It was not in the original administration bill.

The inference of this statement is that the net-investment amendment was surreptitiously inserted in the bill and did not and does not have the approval of the administration. It is true that this amendment was not in the bill as originally presented, but it was considered at least more than once by the committee, drawn and presented by the same gentlemen who drew and presented the original bill, and has been approved by all three of the Secretaries who will be charged with the administration of the law.

I quote again from the minority report:

In a word, this so-called net-investment amendment provides that the Government shall become an absolute insurer of all the money invested in the water-power plant. It requires, as a condition precedent to any retaking of the property whatever, that the full net investment shall be returned to the water-power developer; and this is true even though the water-power developer has used the property and received profits and dividends from it for the full life of the lease, covering a period of 50 years. This is also true even though the property has become dilapidated, obsolete, and worthless. It is also true even though the property has never been a going concern and would not have any value whatever to the city, county, State, or Government. * * *

This paragraph contains no single, accurate, or well-founded statement. The Government is in no sense the insurer of the money invested in the plant. It assumes no obligation whatever to take over the plant upon any basis. The obligations are all on the side of the water-power developer. He must construct the plant within the time fixed by the commission and maintain it to the full capacity of the market; he must operate it continuously; he must keep it in an adequate condition of repair; he must provide for its depreciation; he must make necessary additions and extensions; he must meet every requirement of the market by continuing operation at full market capacity during the entire period of the lease as a going concern. If he fails in any of these particulars he may be compelled to meet them or his license may be revoked.

In order to get a single dollar from the Government at the end of the license period the licensee must meet every requirement I have suggested; and this statement is a complete refutation by the terms of the bill itself of every statement made in the paragraph to which I have referred in the minority report.

It would, indeed, be surprising if the gentleman from Oklahoma should succeed in securing the adoption of his plan of recapture upon representations so wholly misleading and without foundation.

Now, I want to say one word in conclusion. Water-power development is necessary and essential now and in the future, both as a matter of conserving the man power of the country as well as conserving the natural resources which ordinarily are used for power purposes. We have by no means reached the end of the coal reserve, but it is not impossible that our coal resources and our ability to utilize them will be in themselves and by virtue of the man-power situation very much depreciated in the course of the next generation.

The development of water power is essential and necessary to meet this situation both now and after the war. The committee has given very earnest and careful consideration to this bill. We have argued out every phase of it upon which there has been a controversy, and I sincerely trust that the bill will pass substantially in the form in which it has been reported by the committee. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 10 minutes.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it is Shakespeare who says: It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven upon the earth beneath." We know how gentle the dews and the rains are.

The gnarled mountains and deep ravines tell something of their power. Mathematics are not pleasant, and I have therefore sometimes tried to make an approximate arithmetic, and will only put the exact figures of what I say in the RECORD. One foot of rain upon a single square mile is over 1,000,000 (1,032,541) cubic yards. During the year our average rainfall is somewhere about 30 inches—more in the Eastern and extreme Western States—and that fall with every square mile averages therefore over two million and one-half (2,565,082) cubic yards in a year, over 2,000,000 (2,174,125) tons of 2,000 pounds each. We do not wonder at the work done by the rain when we think of such figures as these.

Now, if that rainfall over 1 square mile could be used with only 5 feet of fall it would give us over 1 horsepower. We have 3,000,000 square miles in the United States, with an average fall, or an elevation above the sea, which, if it could be used, is certainly much over 100 feet and probably nearer 500 feet. So that from the rainfall in the United States alone, if we had 500 feet average fall and could use it, there would be over 300,000,000 horsepower.

A horsepower is that which will lift 33,000 pounds, say, 16½ tons, 1 foot in a minute. There are, say, half a million (525,600) minutes in a year. The 2,000,000 tons of rainfall would furnish nearly 4 tons a minutes, or one-fourth a horsepower, at 1 foot fall, or a full horsepower with 5 feet fall.

Water power is usually reckoned at 15 second-feet, or 15 cubic feet falling 1 foot a second. This is 60 times that, or 900 cubic feet a minute, or at 62½ pounds as the weight of a cubic foot, 56,250 pounds instead of 33,000, allowing liberally for loss of power; 10 second-feet is a better figure with modern water-power machinery.

The fall on a single square mile, measured in gallons, is enough to supply over 13,000 people with 100 gallons a day.

These figures are not what can be done. The rain evaporates when it falls. It soaks into the ground. It gets away in floods; often there is none in certain parts of the year. The slope is too slow to be fully utilized between the sources of our rivers and the seas. The rainfall could be used if it could be stored, but it is too large a quantity to be stored. We find that out in the Mississippi floods. To store water that would give a thousand horsepower for a year with 5 feet of fall would need a pond a hundred square miles in size 10 feet deep. The powers of man are inadequate to create horsepower except in a very limited degree in special localities where large dams can be constructed.

The real stores of power for the world lie, as was well pointed out recently by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], in the great snow mountains, where at 10,000 feet above the sea the snows of winter are held up, melting and giving water power in summer with such a head that even a small quantity of water gives enormous power. Such mountains have always been the foundation of the irrigation of the world. Large tracts of irrigable land are not to be found except where there is a summer flow from snow mountains, whether it be on the Nile or in India or Italy or in our Western States under the mountains of the north or the Nevadas of the South. That great reservoir of power is in the far West and distant. In the Eastern and Middle States with all the study I could give I have been unable to find out that we have any great reservoir of power except where nature has provided such a reservoir in the Great Lakes, to which the snow-clad mountains of Canada send down rivers from the north and where 180,000 second-feet flow over the Falls of Niagara with a fall from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario of 300 feet which will give, if fully utilized, over 5,000,000 horsepower at that one spot alone. A plan has been developed and set forth in a recent issue of the Scientific American in June last by which half that magnificent flow can be utilized without damage to the scenic beauty of the Falls. The plan was to put a dam across the river near Buffalo, where there is a slow flow and a broad river, which with flashboards and sluice gates will allow the whole flow to go by day without taking a bit away for the mills and dam it back by night, so that the mills would have half of this great power of 5,000,000 horsepower. It will be done some day. Below on the St. Lawrence, fed by the same Lakes, are rapids within our boundary line, and half the flow there amounts to 500,000 horsepower.

There is something to be done even in the East. The question is how to save our coal, how to relieve our people from the gases and injury that come from the use of coal, and how to get our share of what in time will be the great engine of civilization, and perhaps more largely in other countries, but we must make the most of what God has given us in our own.

Mr. Chairman, I have said a word to make people realize the greatness of this subject. There is about 30,000,000 to 60,000,000 horsepower in the country which is supposed to be available with the reservoirs we have, the snow mountains, and the Great Lakes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the distinguished gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. With pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not intend to convey to the House and the country that it is only upon those streams that have a summer flow that we will be able by building dams and reservoirs to hold back a sufficient amount of water to establish enormous hydroelectric plants for hydroelectric purposes and at the same time utilize it for irrigation as well as to prevent floods in the springtime?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not mean to say that we can not do that in certain localities, but I do mean to say that on the whole in this country very little comparatively can be done with streams that have not a summer flow. Our experience in Pennsylvania, in New Jersey, and New York proves this. We have not room for the dams or for the ponds and they would have to be so large, if you calculate that, it is perfectly astounding. You have great dams in the West that are 300 feet deep.

Mr. RAKER. The only misfortune is that in most of this development you will find that some one individual that has a little ranch or a farm puts that above the enormous benefits which would come from the utilization of this by the entire territory.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is a question, sir, I do not care to go into. I can not do the arithmetic on my feet. I have done some. I have made up my mind that our real resources are in nature's ponds, in the snow mountains, and in the Great Lakes, and that you can not make by art anything that will be comparable with them. That is what I state. You can get something.

I see that I have used two or three minutes in this colloquy, and I hope I will obtain that much additional time if I need it. Let me now for a moment refer to the details of this bill. It is unnecessary to go over most of them. They are almost all in the bills that have come here before. Several matters are new.

One is the establishment of a water-power commission composed of the chiefs of the various departments that formerly had water power under their control. Part of it, which related to navigable streams, was under the War Department. Part of it, which related to the forests, was under the Department of Agriculture. Part of it, where Government lands were used, was under the Secretary of the Interior. With different heads, different rulings, and different laws we were not likely to do so well as by the establishment of this commission of the three Secretaries, which is a practical, sensible way of obtaining a consistent administration which will last through the years and decades. I commend it to the House as a good thing, one which is new in this bill.

I commend also to the House the new provisions to which, to my astonishment, objection has been made. There are two. One is a provision for keeping strict accounts of the real net investment made in the project, so that all will know from time to time what is being done. The second one is a provision which says that every contract shall contain an arrangement by which, if there be surplus earnings above a fair return on that investment, those surplus earnings shall be applied either in the paying off of and amortization of this investment or in the reduction of rates either by dividends back to the rate payers or otherwise.

These provisions will be found—and I will take the liberty to insert them in what I have to say—on page 27, section 3, in the definition of net investments, and in the provision under section 10, clause (d), on pages 36 and 37 of the bill, with reference to amortization. I will just give a single word to these.

Net investment means the actual legitimate original cost as defined and interpreted in the classification of the investment in road and equipment of steam roads, plus cost of additions and betterments thereof, minus certain items of unappropriated surplus, and so forth, which I will not read:

"Net investment" in a project means the actual legitimate original cost thereof as defined and interpreted in the "Classification of investment in road and equipment of steam roads, issue of 1914, Interstate Commerce Commission," plus similar costs of additions thereto and betterments thereof, minus the sum of the following items properly allocated thereto, if and to the extent that such items have been accumulated during the period of the license from earnings in excess of a fair return on such investment: (a) Unappropriated surplus, (b) aggregate credit balances of current depreciation accounts, and (c) aggregate appropriations of surplus or income held in amortization, sinking fund, or similar reserves, or expended for additions or betterments. The term "cost" shall include, in so far as applicable, the elements thereof prescribed in said classification, but shall not include expenditures from funds obtained through donations by States, municipalities, individuals, or others.

We are going here to do something that has been tried. The accounting system of the railroads is contained not merely in the little book referred to, but other books to which that one refers, in which it is provided that if a railroad build a new station the whole cost of the original station is deducted from the new cost of the other. This is only an example; these books contain hundreds of pages of rulings showing how the accounts shall be managed. It is therefore impossible under those circumstances for a man to take a license and then to charge everything from year to year, whether it be the repair of a dam, or whatever it may be, to his capital account, so as to increase apparent profits, and then say, "I have made tremendous profits and those tremendous profits fix the value of my plant and you have got to pay them to me." The bill establishes a system of accounting by which the United States will find out what the real profits were after charging what ought to go to repairs and maintenance to current account, and not charge them to the capital account. It makes for honesty and straightforwardness; and how anyone can object to it is hard to see. It prevents the mere kiting of a project, as has been done so often with railroads, which have paid dividends because they charge to capital account expenses which ought to have gone to their income. This system is devised in order to prevent that.

Now, it is fortified by the other provision. There is danger, even when you have a good system and good rules, that they may not be enforced from time to time unless you are looking after it from year to year.

Now, by the second clause, to which I have referred, it is the duty of the commission and will be the duty of everyone else to look after it from year to year, because every year there is an investigation to find out what the earnings have been. If they are less than a fair return upon the cost of the investment, they will go to the licensee. If they are more than a fair return—and what will be a fair return will be expressed in the lease—then they may be applied and shall be applied under the contract, either to the reduction of the original cost and of the amount that the Government shall pay on recapture, or else they will be applied to a reduction of rates, so that the public will get the benefit, because this provides:

That out of surplus earnings, if any, accumulated in excess of a specified rate of return upon the net investment of a licensee in any project or projects under license the licensee shall establish and maintain amortization reserves, which reserves shall, in the discretion of the commission, be held until the termination of the license or be applied from time to time in reduction of the net investment. Such specified rate of return and the proportion of such surplus earnings to be paid into and held in such reserves shall be set forth in the license.

But it does not stop there. There are cases that we have known where projects instead of making a fair return, we will say, whether it be 10, 15, or 25 per cent, have given 200 per cent. It has not been so with water power, but it has been so in some cases. It may have been so at Niagara, although I do not know anything about it, and I am not charging it. But if there be surplus earnings, such as we have known, at any rate, in public-service companies in old days, when they have been recapitalized and recapitalized until they got to a thousand per cent, because they had made it, we want to know what to do with the surplus. It ought to go back to the public. And in this case, the bill continues:

The license may provide, as to any balance of said surplus earnings, that the same, in whole or part, shall be used in reduction of rates and annually divided and repaid to and among the persons who have paid such rate, according to the amount paid by each such person during the year.

I believe these provisions to be new. I believe them to be just. I believe they can be worked out in such a way as to make liberal contracts which will be liberal to the person who takes the license, and at the same time so carried that he shall not make exorbitant, monopolistic profits, but that the whole enterprise shall be for the good of the public.

I commend the bill to the House for that. I commend it also on the very grounds objected to as to recapture. If there are no such provisions and no such accounts, and licensees may keep their accounts as they please, you come to the end of the term, and the owner says, "I have spent so much in the investment account," and nobody can properly revise it after 50 years. This clause provides that the investment account shall be carefully scanned every year for the purpose of this amortization process and reduction of rates, and that investment accounts shall be looked after yearly so that no such claim shall be made as to the value of the property at the end of the term. It provides for careful scrutiny of the property from time to time and from year to year, so that at the end of the term the Government can fairly pay to the party the fair value and cost of his property, not on the verdict of a jury, on the mere allegation that "we have made so much money and put in so much money," and with accounts that nobody can scan, unless gone over by experts in the past 50 years, but with adjusted, settled accounts, settled from year to year, so as to show always what is fair between the people and the persons who have taken licenses.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this bill is so fairly drawn that it not only protects the people but it will protect investors because of the certainty that will come from these accounts and from the management of this commission. I believe, therefore, that the bill ought to be passed in its present form, and that no uncertainty as to future values should be injected into it. It should stand. The action of the license, if fair, should be recognized, and scanned from year to year; the moneys expended and received should be apportioned properly as between profits and investment, and a basis ascertained by which we can deal with them fairly in the future, as we intend to deal with them fairly now.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that that is all I have to say in the general debate. It seemed to me that we were getting confused on too many matters. These three features are right: The commission is proper, the provisions as to investment accounts are proper, and so are those as to the accounts as to income and its appropriation, including the appropriation of any surplus income above a fair earning. These are the things which are new in this bill, and which I commend to the House as new and just methods of solving the problems in the management of great undertakings of this sort. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied 25 minutes of his time. He yields back 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I had expected to take some little time in the discussion of this bill, but I am inclined to think that interest in the arguments is running out; that is to say, the recess checked the interest that had been created during several hours of keen debate, and now other matters of supreme importance concerning the war program are awaiting consideration.

I would like, however, to take a minute at this time to congratulate the members of the entire committee on the work that they have performed in the preparation of the bill. Here is a bill certain parts of which have been in keen dispute for many years. Requests have come in for a compromise bill, and this committee, under the leadership of the chairman, Mr. SIMS, on the Democratic side, and our Republican on this side, Mr. ESCH, has produced a bill that I hope will go through.

And yet the bill in its present form is not satisfactory, although it is the best we can get. For myself, I shall never become fully reconciled to any measure that fixes the western public-land States so that they shall be, for all time to come, part commonwealths and part provinces. I think that is extremely unfair to the West. The time should come when these Western States should come into full and free title to all the land in their confines. Under a leasing system that can never happen. However, little can be gained now by the discussion of disputed features.

I inserted in the hearings of the committee, in part 1, at page 165, statements from three of the larger municipalities in the State of Washington with reference to section 19. These are resolutions of the city governments there, all of whom utilize water power, all of whom have municipal plants, and they have resolved to the same effect. I read the Tacoma municipal resolutions, as follows:

Whereas the city of Tacoma has a municipally owned light and power plant of the value of approximately $5,000,000, and said plant now has more than 20,000 customers, and the city is now contemplating the acquisition and development of a power site on the South Fork of the Skokomish River in the Olympic National Forest, or the Cowlitz River in Rainier National Forest; and

Whereas the President of the United States has recommended, and Congress is considering, the passage of additional legislation relating to the use of the lands of the United States for the development of water power, and a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives during the month of January, 1918, known as the "Administration bill," and an examination of said bill discloses that no authority is expressly conferred upon the States or legal subdivisions thereof to condemn the rights of the licensees under the provisions of said bill: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the council of the city of Tacoma, That the city of Tacoma respectfully urges that Congress, in passing any water-power legislation, specifically authorize the several States and legal subdivisions thereof to condemn the rights of the licensees upon Government lands, upon making just compensation therefor under the provisions of the eminent-domain statutes of the various States; be it further

Resolved, That section 19 of said so-called "Administration" water-power bill be, and the same is hereby, approved by the city of Tacoma for the reason that the wording of said section relating to the regulation of the rates and management of the corporation developing the site upon the public domain is not prejudicial to the interests of the city. Congress, however, is expressly urged to refrain from amending said section to embody the provisions of the so-called "Shields" Senate bill, for the reason that under the said provisions of the "Shields" bill the city of Tacoma would be prevented from acquiring or developing the water-power site upon the public domain, since the provisions of said "Shields" bill make it obligatory that the licensee thereunder, whether a municipal or private corporation, shall be under the regulation of the State public service commission, whereas the municipalities of the State of Washington are permitted to, and do, regulate and govern their own publicly owned utilities.

I present that now for what it is worth. The committee has acted, and I am told that that part of the bill is satisfactory, although it is not the best that could have been given to us. As a matter of fact, a great deal of time has been wasted in theoretical discussion of the grand water-power proposition and how the thing shall be done. What do the theories amount to? Action is the thing—any kind of action is better than none. The district that I have the honor to represent is simply running wild with water power, and it is all put down in these lists as potential water power. From the Columbia River to the highest peaks of the Olympics and the Cascades is water power everywhere, and three-fourths of it will never be used in the next 100 years. In some parts of the district a population sufficient to use in full the potential water power could not be crowded into the mountainous acres, and mighty little of it can be used without the investment of great capital—millions. And capital in such quantities is not quick to come into grand, new projects in the far West. Under any kind of water-power legislation I can guarantee there must be great allurement and great possibilities—and some certainty. However, in certain parts of the State of Washington, which are now sagebrush wastes, cities of from ten to fifteen and even fifty thousand people can readily be developed.

I know now of one locality that, with legislation permitting action, will result in investing $30,000,000, if that amount can be had in war time, where an entire city is likely to be laid out, with parks, cheap municipal power, good offerings to manufacturers—in fact, a city full born the minute the water comes through the turbines as power. The profits of all who settle there will not come from the profits of the water power or all from the water that is raised and spread on the surrounding land, but from the making of a city out of the sagebrush. That is the way things are done in the West. I have here the appeal of the President for water-power legislation which I would like to read, because some of us may have forgotten it. It was his message read to Congress December 8, 1914. At that time, nearly four years ago, he said:

We have year after year debated, without end or conclusion, the best policy to pursue with regard to the use of the ores and forests and water powers of our national domain in the rich States of the West, when we should have acted; and they are still locked up. The key is still turned upon them, the door shut fast at which thousands of vigorous men, full of initiative, knock clamorously for admittance. The water power of our navigable streams outside the national domain also, even in the Eastern States, where we have worked and planned for generations, is still not used as it might be, because we will and we won't; because the laws we have made do not intelligently balance encouragement against restraint. We withhold by regulation.

I have come to ask you to remedy and correct these mistakes and omissions, even at this short session of a Congress which would certainly seem to have done all the work that could reasonably be expected of it. The time and the circumstances are extraordinary, and so must our efforts be also.

And, by the way, the whole objection to the grand conservation program, all very pretty in theory but fatal to the present generation, and in the case of some Western States fatal to the generation after the next in forcing those now out there to pay excess taxes for development, for road building, and all that, while they see the resources of the State withheld from them for posterity, and the leasing returns given largely to the Government and not to the State.

The President goes on to say:

Fortunately, two great measures, finely conceived, the one to unlock, with proper safeguards, the resources of the national domain, the other to encourage the use of the navigable waters outside that domain for the generation of power, have already passed the House of Representatives and are ready for immediate consideration and action by the Senate. With the deepest earnestness I urge their prompt passage. In them both we turn our backs upon hesitation and makeshift and formulate a genuine policy of use and conservation, in the best sense of those words. We owe the one measure not only to the people of that great western country for whose free and systematic development, as it seems to me, our legislation has done so little, but also to the people of the Nation as a whole; and we as clearly owe the other in fulfillment of our repeated promises that the water power of the country should in fact as well as in name be put at the disposal of great industries which can make economical and profitable use of it, the rights of the public being adequately guarded the while, and monopoly in the use prevented. To have begun such measures and not completed them would indeed mar the record of this great Congress very seriously. I hope and confidently believe that they will be completed.

That is the appeal of the President. It was made nearly four years ago, and we are still debating water power. But we are moving. This bill is the work of the special committee the President caused to be named, and represents their efforts at a compromise which he urged.

Gentlemen, we have had lots of time for discussion of water power. Let us hope that within the next few days enough time will be given for a free discussion of man power. Water-power legislation has waited a dozen years or more, but the man-power bill—the new draft bill—can not wait; but still it need not be railroaded through this House. With its clause for 18-year-olds, the bill is due to be reported this very afternoon. The hearings have been hurried. But let us know all about the absolute necessity for the bill as it stands before we vote on it. Let us have time for consideration of amendments that will be offered. If we find we must take the 18-year-olds, let us have an amendment that more than one son shall not be taken from a family until we have exhausted all other available man power. The wheel of fate makes queer turns. Two and three sons in single families were drafted last year, while other families went scot-free. Shall we take the 18-year-old from a family that has freely given up its 21-year-old and its 23-year-old? As reported in the newspapers the discussion of the development of the plan for drafting the males of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 has taken such queer turns that I feel, as many Members feel, that if it is necessary we will take our boys of 18, but that if it is not shown to us to be immediately and absolutely necessary we will make a draft minimum age of 20 years.

At one time it was thought to be quite wrong to take a boy 18 years old, and yet now an appeal is specially made for 18-year-old boys, and with that same appeal comes the statement that a certain percentage of them—those who are in college—should be left in college, so that we would have some educated youths at the end of the war or for officers if the war continues. How unfair that would be. That would be an up-to-date exemplification of "to him that hath shall be given" with a reverse English.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I was remarking that it has been stated—unofficially, of course—that we should exempt a few 18-year-old boys, so that they might finish their education in college. That would be the limit of unfairness. As a matter of fact, the age at which boys graduate from the high school is just about 18 years. I believe that the statistics show that 52 per cent of the boys who graduate from the high schools are 18 years of age.

Mr. Chairman, I was not able to go home during the recess—I live too far away—but I know the feeling of that district. It is for winning the war and for throwing in all the weight that we have. The people of that district will give the lads, the striplings, but they do not want to do it while available fighting men of maturer years remain. [Applause.] I could not visit my district, but I had an opportunity to go around in some of the neighboring States, making little war speeches, talking to patriotic citizens, and in several communities within the last two weeks I asked the committee in charge of the meetings to bring all of the 18-year-old boys they could, so that I might look at them. At one place when the meeting was called I asked those boys to stand up and they stood up. I tell you that in most cases they were mere striplings, all anxious and willing to go to war and fight, but, to my mind, not ready for the battle line. They had boyish minds in boyish bodies. I hope Congress will freely and fearlessly discuss this question. I hope the Committee on Rules will bring in a rule giving us plenty of time to talk over this matter of sending boys 18 years old over the seas. I would be willing to see the minimum age put at 20 years for the present, and I think that with the present population we might take them at 19 years at the outside, holding some of the youth of the land in our own hands as reserves. Further, I would like to see Congress keep in its hands the plan of letting 18-year-old boys be drafted now and put into a deferred class to be used at the will of the War Department. Congress is here and will be in session nearly all of this fall. The Congress will expire by limitation on the 4th of March, but if the war continues it seems certain an extra session will be called. Therefore, if later it becomes necessary to add 18-year-old boys to our fighting man power that we may have enough men to crush this foreign enemy of ours across the seas with numbers, let us make the call when we need it, instead of having the call placed on file in the War Department. If we have to have the young boys, Congress can call for them in five days. I think that is only a fair statement. I do not want to take too much time away from the discussion of the water-power bill. I think it is unfortunate that the water-power bill was not closed up four weeks ago, when the debate upon it was at white heat. Much that is being said on it now is merely perfunctory, and I presume many of the Members will do as I propose to do—swallow my objections, pay little attention to the minority report, and vote with the committee for a bill that will get us some kind of water-power legislation that will let some water go through the wheels to make industry go around. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, after the very plain and interesting description of the differences in the committee, as shown to us by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] at the opening of the debate to-day, it seems to me that very little more need be said about the difference between the majority members of the committee and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who filed the minority report. We all realize that the day is here when this continuous postponement of proper legislation for the development of the water power of the country must come to an end. The lack of legislation to overcome the waste of water power is a source of just criticism at the present time.

I believe the last amendment to the general dam bill was passed in 1910, and that was made so stringent that since that time there has been practically no water-power development anywhere in the country. In reading the minority report of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] it appears to me that for some reason or other people with money to invest are relegated to a sort of criminal class by him; that they are not people with whom we should have business dealings; and that, therefore, it is his object to secure an amendment to the report of the committee which practically will tie up water-power development in this country in the coming years exactly as it has been tied up during the past decade. In reading the clause to which he makes objection, I think any fair-minded man will agree with the committee report and with the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] this morning. Here is the clause to which the minority report takes exception:

"Net investment" in a project means the actual legitimate original cost thereof as defined and interpreted in the "Classification of investment in road and equipment of steam roads, issue of 1914, Interstate Commerce Commission," plus similar costs of additions thereto and betterments thereof, minus the sum of the following items properly allocated thereto, if and to the extent that such items have been accumulated during the period of the license from earnings in excess of a fair return on such investment: (a) Unappropriated surplus, (b) aggregate credit balances of current depreciation accounts, and (c) aggregate appropriations of surplus or income held in amortization, sinking fund, or similar reserves, or expended for extensions or betterments. The term "cost" shall include, in so far as applicable, the elements thereof prescribed in said classification, but shall not include expenditures from funds obtained through donations by States, municipalities, individuals, or others.

Mr. Chairman, unless some such definition as that is finally enacted into law, it is absolutely impossible to secure any investment whatever of capital in water-power development. Either the United States Government itself must reach out into that branch of work and actually develop our waste water power with Federal capital, or we must meet the wishes to a certain extent of people willing to invest capital. A period of 50 years may seem to our minds a long time, but in respect to investment it is not a long time. It is a short period, and unless there is a fair recapture clause, such as the committee report, the conditions as we now have them will continue indefinitely.

I am particularly interested in this situation as there is no more typical illustration of the waste of power than that which flows through a portion of my own district. An effort was made in the Sixty-second Congress to secure a special act in behalf of the Connecticut River, but for various reasons it failed. There is going to waste there daily a possible development of 40,000 horsepower, in a very thickly settled valley where that cheaper power would be of great advantage to manufacturing and industrial plants. Further than that, the Connecticut River proposition carries with it the possibility of navigation which means a great deal to that section of our country. The Connecticut River situation has been discussed on this floor so many times that I need not take up any considerable length of time in a repetition, but it is sufficiently typical of the exact situation that we desire to overcome by this bill that I beg the indulgence of the House for a brief reference thereto. Just above Hartford there is what is known as the Enfield Rapids, and in order to get around the falls there must be constructed locks and dams. For years private capital has stood ready to build the locks and dams for the purposes of navigation in exchange for the right to manufacture power under the act as submitted in previous Congresses. Numerous surveys have been made.

The last one by the War Department was reported in the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, in which there is a very complete statement of the relation between private capital and the Federal Government. It is desired to secure a channel from Hartford to Holyoke, Mass., which is in the district I represent, of 12 feet in depth and 100 feet wide. The then Chief of Engineers, Gen. Kingman, in his report to the Secretary of War under date of November 12, 1915, recommended an appropriation of $1,870,000 for that purpose, with $65,000 annual appropriation for maintenance in the future. That was contingent upon an agreement being entered into with private capital which would build the locks and dams at an estimated cost of nearly $4,000,000. In other words, if an appropriation of $1,370.000 was made, private capital was to meet it with an appropriation of about $4,000,000. That arrangement can not be entered into as the result of the very stringent law now on the statute books; and if the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] should be adopted to the present bill, it is my opinion, based on information that I have received from authoritative sources, that the same situation will be continued indefinitely. The result of securing a channel 12 feet deep extending from Hartford to Holyoke would be a very great diminution in the cost of freight transportation, as well as a reduction in the congestion of freight in all that section of New England at the present time. The congestion there has been something terrible during the past year. Last winter it was a question not whether fuel could be secured to carry on the business enterprises of the section but whether fuel could be secured to keep away the cold from the citizens and avoid suffering that would necessarily result.

There will be a saving on the transportation of over a million tons of coal of from 40 to 50 cents per ton. There will be a corresponding saving in transportation of manufactured products as well as on the raw material going into the section. All these features are very thoroughly covered in the report to which I have referred. There is a population in the places bordering on the river in Massachusetts to-day of over 200,000 people, aside from the adjoining territory, that would be naturally benefited very materially. So it seems to me that in view of such a typical illustration as that which I am citing there can be no question in the mind of the membership of this House as to the proper method of procedure. Here we have a bill originating in the departments having to do with the carrying on of work itself looking directly to securing the development of the desired power throughout the country combined with the opportunity for navigation. So that when suggestions are offered looking to a change of the phraseology of that bill it seems to me rather than conserving the natural resources of the country such change would be absolutely a continuation of the waste of the natural resources of the country which is the result of the legislation now on the statute books. I therefore sincerely trust that the illustration I have given the House will be the means of showing the need of this body abiding by the decision of the committee and supporting the majority report. There are, of course, opportunities to find defects in the bill, but it is the first constructive piece of legislation looking to the conserving of our natural resources and at the same time using those resources in the development of navigable streams that has been brought before the Congress since I have been a Member of it. I therefore shall give my most hearty support to the majority report.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from Tennessee will now yield some time.

Mr. SIMS. How much time did the gentleman from Massachusetts yield back?

Mr. ESCH. How much time did the gentleman from Massachusetts yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA].

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, the patriotic attitude taken by the people of Porto Rico on account of the war has caused the publication of many articles in American newspapers.

The tenor of those articles is to show that our patriotism was the outgrowth of a single war activity, and the error has been made by the writers of not dealing with the Porto Rican movement in all its phases and magnitude.

In connection with the conservation of food in Porto Rico very interesting articles have been published, but as these articles seem to limit our patriotism to that particular war activity I have considered it advisable to publish in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if I can obtain unanimous consent, an article recently published by the New York Herald, which nevertheless fails to show in all its magnitude the extraordinary work of the people of Porto Rico in this war; yet the article contains a valuable exposition of the activities on the island with which it deals.

In fact, the loyalty of the people of Porto Rico has caused such great admiration that it has prompted many persons to seize the opportunity to appear before the American people as the leaders of this great patriotic movement.

I wish to say here, before the American Congress, that all the glory that may be derived from our loyalty to the allies' cause should belong solely and exclusively to the people of Porto Rico as a whole and not to any determined individuals.

It should be understood that an extraordinary movement of sympathy has taken place in the island toward the American Nation since President Wilson initiated his work in our behalf and since this Congress has granted us an organic law more democratic than the one we had. Therefore, President Wilson, who has labored so earnestly in our behalf, and the present Congress, which shaped his wishes into law, are the only personal influences that may have been responsible for the patriotic stand of the Porto Rican people about which so much is now being published.

There are certain broad reasons which justify the admiration and affection of the people of the island of Porto Rico for the President and people of the United States. This country is fighting for the freedom of the world, and Porto Rico, which is a part of the world, has been sighing for freedom for many centuries. Thanks to the efforts of the great American who presides over the destiny of this Nation, and at present over the destiny of the world, the great powers are advocating the liberty and self-determination of small countries, and Porto Rico is a small country. America is fighting for the sake of justice, and that is what Porto Rico needs—justice. So your principles are our principles, your cause is our cause, and our duty as American citizens imposes upon us the obligation of fighting against all the enemies of the United States, no matter what the cause of fighting is. Are not these powerful reasons to unite the island of Porto Rico, small as it is, in a perpetual brotherhood with this great part of the American Continent? What ought to be our attitude when not only Porto Rico but humanity is indebted to the United States for having converted the most terrible war which the world has faced into a fountain of justice, freedom, and democracy, with assurance of a permanent peace? Some months ago I wrote in Spanish a poem dedicated to Woodrow Wilson, of which a free translation into English reads as follows:

EVANGELIC DEBT.

While Europe roars like a hunted beast at bay
In a horrible struggle, titanic and ferocious,
A man here in America waves a flag
And the tyrants tremble at the echo of his voice.

'Tis Wilson who in the high capitoline summits
Speaks an august language that was never heard before,
And causes the Andine Mountains to tremble
In a sublime tremor of redemption and peace.

Centuries ago, an intrepid mariner
Crossed the immense expanse of ocean
And, as in a divine dream, discovered a New World.
Europe educated and Christ welcomed it to His mercy.
And to-day America, in return, recrosses the same route
To offer liberty to the Old World.

[Applause.]

The debt has been paid. While Europe discovered a world for Christianity, America is discovering now the new world of liberty.

President Wilson has enunciated the broad policy of the United States in the following remarks delivered on May 27, 1917, which he has sought to emphasize by repeating on several occasions:

We believe these fundamental things:

First. That every people has a right to choose the sovereignty under which they shall live. Like other nations, we have ourselves no doubt once and again offended against that principle when for a little while controlled by selfish passion, as our franker historians have been honorable enough to admit; but it has become more and more our rule of life and action.

Second. That the small States of the world have a right to enjoy the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; and Third. That the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression and disregard of the rights of peoples and nations.

So sincerely do we believe in these things that I am sure that I speak the mind and wish of the people of America when I say that the United States is willing to become a partner in any feasible association of nations formed in order to realize these objects and make them secure against violation.

There is nothing that the United States wants for itself that any other nation has. We are willing, on the contrary, to limit ourselves along with them to a prescribed course of duty and respect for the rights of others which will check any selfish passion of our own, as it will check any aggressive impulse of theirs.

Along the same lines the President has also stated in his address to the Senate on January 19, 1917:

No peace can last or ought to last which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that no right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property. The world can be at peace only if its life is stable, and there can be no stability where the will is in rebellion, where there is not tranquillity of spirit and a sense of justice, of freedom, and of right.

I would fain believe that I am speaking for the silent mass of mankind everywhere who have as yet had no place or opportunity to speak their real hearts out concerning the death and ruin they see to have come already upon the persons and the homes they hold most dear.

No nation should seek to extend its polity over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own polity, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful. There is no entangling alliance in a concert of power. When all unite to act in the same sense and with the same purpose all act in the common interest and are free to live their own lives under a common protection.

I am proposing government by the consent of the governed; that freedom of the seas which in international conference after conference representatives of the United States have urged with the eloquence of those who are the convinced disciples of liberty; and that moderation of armaments which makes of armies and navies a power for order merely, not an instrument of aggression or of selfish violence. These are American principles, American policies.

In his address at Mount Vernon on July 4, 1918, declaring the principles and hopes of America in war, the President said:

What we seek is the reign of law, based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind.

The President of the United States has placed this Nation in a most advantageous position by his concise presentation of the most noble principles of humanity and democracy and incomparable interpretation of the rights of the people, great and small, weak and powerful, to freedom, security, and self-government. For these statements the great and powerful will respect and render to this country the tribute of their admiration, while the weak, bearing to the President and the Nation eternal gratitude, will feel confident that when the hour arrives such a champion of democracy will not lend a deaf ear to their cries for freedom and liberty.

The Democratic platform of 1916 voiced these principles, and the Republican platform enunciated the same doctrine:

We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use all its resources not only to make itself safe at home but also to make secure its just interests throughout the world, and both for this end and in the interest of humanity to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice.

We believe that every people has the right to choose the sovereignty under which it shall live—government with the consent of the governed—that the small States of the world have the right to enjoy from other nations the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; that the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression or disregard of the rights of peoples and nations; and we believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve these principles and maintain inviolate the complete security of the highways of the seas for the common, unhindered use of all nations.

The confidence that the people of Porto Rico have in the United States is strengthened more and more every day by these illuminating remarks of the leaders of the Nation.

Full justice is yet to be granted to the people of Porto Rico, for we have not been given any voice in the appointment of our governors nor in the appointment of the attorney general, commissioner of education, or justices of the supreme court, yet the executive has the power of absolute veto granted him by this Congress.

But the people of Porto Rico feel that they have in President Wilson and the American Congress sympathetic friends, and they hope soon to obtain full recognition of their rights. The gratitude of the people of Porto Rico is great and intense for the concessions already made them, and their love for the American people will attain extraordinary proportions when this Congress does complete justice to our people, granting us all the power to which we are entitled in the management of our own affairs.

Fortunately for Porto Rico her destiny has been in the hands of a just and sympathetic administrator in the person of Gov. Yager, who made great efforts for the approval of our present organic law. To govern the people of Porto Rico in accordance with the spirit of American institutions a scheme of government should be devised under which the governor will be susceptible to public opinion, interpreting and administering our laws as was intended by Congress. Any governor who adheres to this policy is assured the affection and undivided support of the people of Porto Rico. Gov. Yager has our esteem and confidence, and the only objection that could possibly be urged against him is that he has not been selected by the people of Porto Rico, who have never been consulted in the appointment of their governors. Should he have been elected by our people or appointed with our consultation he would be the most beloved executive our country has ever known.

I do not hesitate to express before Congress these ideas with regard to the election of our governor, although I recognize that only the States of the Union have enjoyed this right since the birth of the American Nation. But we are not to be governed any more by precedents when precedents do not conform to the natural rules of justice. In these extraordinary times we are facing every day new events and unexpected problems and we have to prepare ourselves for the inauguration of the new policy which is going to renovate the world.

Full self-government should be granted.

The American Constitution recognizes only a republican form of government as the permanent status of any part of this country, and it is not a republican government at all under which the governor is not elected directly or indirectly by the people. A country can not be half republic and half empire. The policy of the United States must be consistent with the principles which made the Republic so great.

I know the argument which may be advanced in opposition to our political aspirations: "You are not yet prepared for the enjoyment of complete self-government." Porto Rico is able enough to control its own affairs. If any contrary opinion prevails among the people in this country we are sure that it is due to lack of knowledge of our social and political life and not to any selfish feeling. This argument of nonpreparation, which is as old as the world, is the excuse that strong nationalities often offer to justify their intervention in the internal affairs of small countries. The United States will not do that. This excuse may sound well in the lips of the old monarchies of Europe, but not in the lips of the young American Republic. This Nation is too great to make use of such a poor argument. Grant the people of Porto Rico the full enjoyment of their rights, and while Congress prepares a law to that effect let the President test the ability and capacity of the people of Porto Rico by the appointment of a governor, at the proper time, previously indorsed by the people of the island.

Porto Rico has been extremely patriotic in all phases of war activity in these days of peril for the American Nation. The success of the food commission constitutes only a part of the great contribution of Porto Rico to the national cause. The food commission is entitled to our recognition for the work done, and I should like to congratulate them in all their work, but the imposition of fines upon some people without due process of law, such as occurred in the case of Jose D. Padilla, has merited some criticism. The Federal food administrator must respect the law if he wants it to be obeyed by our citizens. To impose fines as a court of justice without giving to the accused a day in court is to abuse the power granted by Congress to the Food Administration. The fact that these fines are collected for the Red Cross is not an excuse. There is no excuse for the transgression of law, above all when these transgressions are committed by the authorities who are bound to respect the law.

In a communication addressed on May 9, 1918, to Jose D. Padilla by the Federal food administrator in Porto Rico, the latter made the following statements:

From the investigation made according to the charges presented against you in relation with your bakery business in that city and the manufacture of crackers in contravention of the regulations of the national administration, I have arrived at the conclusion, after considering the proofs obtained and the declaration made by you when you appeared at this office the 29th of April ult., that you proceeded deliberately and maliciously in this case, and submitted the same to the United States Food Administrator, Washington, D. C. I have received by cable yesterday from this officer the following order:

That you, Jose D. Padilla, license No. B23776, in the bakery business, close your establishment for a period of six months, to take effect May 16, 1918, and further, that you subscribe the sum of $500 in behalf of the American Red Cross.

Send me the check in behalf of the mentioned institution for the stated sum of money and proceed to the closing of your establishment on the date indicated.

Respectfully,

ALBERT E. LEE,
Federal Food Administrator.

The illegality of this proceeding was consummated by the payment of the fine. Jose D. Padilla, fearing more drastic measures by the Federal Food Administration, and in obedience to the order issued against him, sent immediately a check of $500 to the Federal Food Administrator.

As I have already affirmed, most of the articles appearing in the American newspapers state that Porto Rico has shown its patriotism by the conservation of food. This information gratifies us very much because it shows the wonderful results achieved by one of our local organizations. In fact, all branches of the insular administration have worked with practically the same results. In the matter of food conservation our record is complete and perfectly clear. Long before the creation of a Food Administration in the United States was even talked about such a body was created by the Porto Rican Legislature, the food commission of that island having been created by the joint resolution introduced by Hon. Antonio R. Barcelo, leader of the majority party in the Porto Rican General Assembly on April 12, 1917, immediately upon the declaration of war. The United States Food Administration was not created by act of Congress until August 10, 1917, four months later. Therefore, it will be seen that the Porto Rican commission antedates those of either the Federal administration or any of the States.

Mr. Chairman, before leaving this subject I wish to call attention to the splendid service of Col. Orval P. Townshend, who has commanded the United States forces on the island and superintended the organization of the military forces in the manner which has elicited all this praise of which the American public has recently been reading. Col. Townsend has proven an able officer and an untiring worker and organizer, and he has the full confidence of the Porto Rican people.

I think that possibly the best exposition which has yet appeared of the activities of Porto Rico in this war was published in the New York Herald last Sunday, and I ask that I be allowed to insert it in the RECORD. In connection with it, however, I wish to say, in regard to what the author has to say about the sufferings of Porto Ricans under the Spanish Government, that it is only fair to point out that home rule had been granted by Spain to Porto Rico when the American Army took possession of the island. It is also an error to state that Porto Ricans had grown submissive to abuse. Porto Rico has never yielded to any kind of despotism. Under the Spanish Government, as well as under the American flag, we have always protested energetically against all abuses and arbitrariness committed in our country. It is true that entire freedom has never been granted to Porto Rico in spite of our efforts and sacrifices, but there is no man in the world who has a higher concept of liberty than the Porto Rican.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Herald, Aug. 11, 1918.]

PORTO RICANS DEMAND THE RIGHT TO FIGHT FOR THE FLAG THAT AT LAST IS THEIR OWN—HENRY A. WISE WOOD, AN ENTHUSIASTIC AMERICAN, WRITES OF HIS EXPERIENCES ON THE FAMOUS ISLAND POSSESSION AND DESCRIBES THE ENTHUSIASM WITH WHICH ITS INHABITANTS INSISTED THAT THE PRIVILEGES OF THE MOTHERLAND AS WELL AS THE RESPONSIBILITIES BE APPLIED TO THEM IN EQUAL SHARE—COL. ORVAL P. TOWNSHEND, COMMANDING THE PORTO RICAN TROOPS, A DISTINGUISHED FIGURE OF THE MILITARY LIFE AND PREPARATION OF THE ISLAND.

(By Henry A. Wise Wood.)

As I approached the harbor of San Juan, P. R., the last shafts of the sun were touching with gold the battered and rusty walls of its ancient defenses. El Morro, "the nose," to the west, San Cristobal to the east—superb monuments of four centuries of Spanish occupation—were still watchfully holding within their grim charge that which Spain in the days of her glory thought a jewel of great price.

Scars of French shot and of Dutch, of shot of Drake and Hawkins, no soil of time has been able to efface from the Morro; these are fast in the pages of the history of the Spanish Main, than which none is more gloriously decked with beloved romance. The tales of the finding of the New World and its flailing for wealth by the old—sagas these of the first masters of the waters new found by the "Admiral of the Indian Seas"—are among the most treasured of all records of strong men at work upon rough deeds.

As the ship swung slowly beneath El Morro there came into view, perched high beyond the shoulder of this perhaps the oldest fortress of the Western Hemisphere, Casa Blanca—the White House—glistening against the evening's violet sky. Built, it is said, by one of Columbus's ship's company, San Juan's first governor, the searcher for youth and discoverer of the "Isla la Florida," the home of Juan Ponce de Leon, is still the seat of military power. But over it flies the American flag.

Sight of the flag brought me to the present, from which I had been endeavoring to escape. All that had occurred since first our flag flew above these historic piles crowded into mind, and bitterly I thought of the penalty we Anglo-Saxons are to pay for 20 years of blindness, of fatuous dream worship, of heedlessly following after history's ignis fatuus, a peace wrought of paper-clad security. Then I fell to wondering how these new people of ours are reacting to the emergency in which they have so little direct concern—what they are doing for the war. And I determined to find out.

How should be ascertained the mental attitude toward the war of these million and a quarter newly acquired people speaking the language of a neutral nation having enemy sympathies? First, it seemed to me by observing the reaction of their legislature. Had this been hostile or passive or actively favorable to Porto Rico's actual participation? Let us see.

MAKING AMERICANS.

On March 2, 1917, American citizenship was conferred upon the Porto Rican. For nearly two decades he had had a land but no country. For 19 years he had been knocking at our door, unable to enter or go elsewhere. The flag over his head was not his flag nor could he raise one of his own. So, only two months before our declaration of war the Porto Rican was not an American citizen. Would he, therefore, be willing to fight for our cause?

It was this query, possibly, that caused the War Department to hesitate when announcing the draft to apply it to Porto Rico. But this hesitation, whatever its cause, had a galvanic effect upon the people of the island. Instantly there arose an indignant protest and a demand that Porto Rico be permitted to supply its full quota to the Army whose flag at last was its flag. Not only would it fight, but the opportunity to do so it demanded as its right. The children of Columbus's conquistadors were willing and ready to support the liberties of the New World, the world that he and their ancestors had carved out with their swords.

Already had the Unionist Party sent a cable to the President of the United States announcing its support of the war, with the demand that "Porto Rico be assigned its full quota of sacrifice and suffering to obtain victory."

But how did the individual Porto Rican react? A month after the declaration of war the Porto Rico regiment of the United States Army was ordered to recruit its full strength and prepare for active duty. In three days it had enlisted 654 men, and so had filled its ranks; in two weeks, drilled and fully uniformed, the regiment was on its way. Again, when Col. Roosevelt's volunteers were being recruited, it is said, 1,700 selected men signed up in seven days.

On August 27 an officers' training camp was opened at Cayay, amid the tobacco fields in the center of the island, with 250 Porto Ricans, 95 per cent of whom were graduates of colleges or universities in the United States. So thoroughly was the work done in this camp that on November 26, 88 per cent of these men were commissioned.

The results of this experiment caused great popular enthusiasm, and another camp, within the Morro Fortress, was opened with 400 men on February 1, 1918, and was hard at work when I visited it. One of its companies is wholly composed of negroes, so that officers of the lower ranks shall be provided for the negro regiments which are to be drawn from the island. Here also is being trained the home guard of San Juan, of 1,500 men, among them the foremost judges and professional and business men of the place, as well as 500 Boy Scouts.

Porto Rico has caught the war fever, and is glad of it—which is the more remarkable, because its people are so little warlike that, although in the revolution belt, it has never known a revolt.

I had not pushed my inquiries far before it became plain that behind this enthusiasm for the war and ardent wish to serve in it was the stimulating influence of one man, an American Army officer. To such an astonishing extent does this soldier seem to have won the affections and confidence of these people that they have not only unquestionably put themselves into his hands in matters relating to the war but have requested the President to make him a brigadier general, so that the Porto Rican troops when they go to the front shall be commanded by him.

EAGER TO HONOR HIM.

A sheaf of these requests has fallen into my hands, from free translations of some of which I select the following excerpts:

The resolution of the House of Representatives of Porto Rico recites that "for some years there has lived among us a noble and generous son of America, directing with great foresight and commendable zeal the honorable and high duty of chief of the American troops in Porto Rico, whose name is well known by all—Orval P. Townshend"; that "Col. Townshend has gained the love and gratitude of this island of Porto Rico by his open and decided efforts for the welfare and prestige of our land, honoring it by an efficient propaganda useful to the good name of Porto Ricans"; that "Orval P. Townshend, as colonel of the Porto Rican troops, has recently successfully carried through an intensive and arduous task to satisfy the wishes of the mothers of the future soldiers who are to give up their lives for the liberty of the world and for the triumph of justice and the rights of humanity, to satisfy those unselfish women who asked that the cantonment for the military instruction of their sons be established in Porto Rico, for the instruction of the sons whose lives they themselves offered with noble patriotism for the defense of the cause upheld by the noble American people"; that "the people of Porto Rico realize the efforts of Col. Townshend to do full justice to Porto Ricans, and consider him one of their valuable champions"; and that, therefore, it is "resolved by this House of Representatives, first, to make a matter of record a vote of thanks and gratitude to Col. Orval P. Townshend for his well-guided purpose in the performance of his official duties; second, that the Government be requested by cable, as a special favor, that Lieut. Col Orval P. Townshend be promoted to the rank of brigadier general."

The work of this man can not be summed up better than by the statement that he has put these new citizens of ours in the mind to make war and to make it with a will. Therefore, when the beautiful palm-shaded, seagirt cantonment, Las Casas, is finished, and Porto Rico's first contingent is called to the colors, its men may be expected to come with a rush, for to be an American soldier is the fashion in Porto Rico.

It is evident that the people are deeply contented with the island's lot. During the 405 years of Spanish occupation Boriquen, as it was called, suffered every conceivable cruelty at the hands of the mother country and its representatives, as well as at those of the enemies of Spain. It was repeatedly plucked from within and plundered from without until it had lost hope and all powers of resistance.

But 20 years of American civil helpfulness and kindly military control have made a new people of these harried islanders, who had grown submissive to abuse—a people who can be made a valuable factor in American life. Not without great reward, I am certain, shall we have "put the conscience of the American people into the islands of the sea," as McKinley once said, and founded human liberty in Porto Rico. The first fruits of this action we are already reaping in the alacrity with which the island's new generation is rushing to our, now its, colors, in defense of the freeman's institutions which it has at last been permitted to embrace.

The food-conservation movement also is having extraordinary and wholly unexpected results. Here is a luxuriantly fertile island set in the tropical seas, peopled with nearly a million and a quarter of agriculturists, and still its inhabitants are physically undeveloped, because underfed. Care is taken to raise well what these people sell—sugar cane, some fruits, and coffee—but no thought at all is given to the cultivation of their own foodstuffs. These, besides the local fruits, consist for the most part of corn meal, rice, beans, and codfish, which are purchased in the "States," notwithstanding that the three vegetable staples can be made to flourish upon their own soil and Porto Rican waters abound in edible fish. Even the table sugar consumed by the more prosperous on this sugar-growing island we ship them.

FOOD SITUATION IN HAND.

In 1917, for instance, Porto Rico imported 7,834 tons of corn meal, 7,480 tons of beans, and, more curious still, 4,666 tons of white sugar—all at higher prices a pound than it received for its principal export—raw sugar. A losing business this.

Into this situation stepped the Food Administration with absolute power. As a consequence of its work, I am informed by John M. Turner, its local chief, none of the vegetable staples, aside from rice, need be imported this year. Sufficient acreage has been planted, he says, to supply the island's normal needs as well as those of Camp Las Casas. Thus, the drain upon our own resources should be lessened and the food cost of the island reduced, while Porto Rico should become not only a self-feeding community but one capable of exporting foodstuffs to its neighbor islands and the mainland.

A remarkable and permanent change in the island's life, I am convinced, may be expected to follow the military training its young men are about to undergo and the revolution which Mr. Turner and his associates are so intelligently making in its food supply.

Here we have reversed our figure of thought and find ourselves dwelling not upon what Porto Rico is doing for the war but upon what the war is doing for Porto Rico. What better example could be found of the unexpected returns that follow upon the exercise of an unselfish patriotism?

No examination of Porto Rico's reaction to the war would be accurate that failed to give weight to the effect produced by the superb insular police force that is conducted by Col. George R. Shanton. New York's "finest" is not so attractively clad nor does it look so much the military body. Of these well trained and disciplined officers which comprise the only police force on the island there are, roughly, only 800 to look after a populace of a million and a quarter, spread throughout a more or less mountainous island 35 miles wide by 90 long.

Truly, aside from a small but needed-to-be-watched element, composed of German and Spanish residents, the sunny and cheerful island of Porto Rico may confidently be classed among the war assets of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Porto Rico asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, on account of the sharply divergent views persisted in with great tenacity by the respective advocates of Federal and State ownership and control of our water-power resources Congress has no more perplexing legislation to vex it than that embodied in the bill now before the House.

It is useless to indulge in mutual recriminations. Suffice to say that these two heretofore seemingly irreconcilable views are in a great measure, together with the present revocable permit, to blame for the failure to develop one of the greatest resources of the country. The American people will no longer tolerate or condone the failure of Congress to enact needed legislation to develop our water-power resources variously estimated at 60,000,000 and with storage at 200,000,000 horsepower, with each horsepower equivalent to the consumption of about 10 tons of coal annually or 30 barrels of oil.

The public is demanding that Congress "play ball" and quit quarreling over the selection of the umpire.

There should be enough statesmanship in Congress, representing both the State and national viewpoint, to enact wise and considerate legislation, to use the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Odgen, in—> that spirit of harmony and conciliation which ought always to characterize the conduct of governments standing in the relation which that of the Union and those of the State bear to each other.

I believe the bill we are now considering was drafted in that "spirit of harmony and conciliation" which Chief Justice Marshall said should characterize our counsels. It does not fully represent my views of the purpose and scope of the correlative rights and powers of the State and National Government. It may not represent your views. Nevertheless, as most legislation is a compromise, this bill is as fair a compromise as can be expected to issue from ingenious and positive minds wedded to pet theories of government, unwilling to stultify long preconceived convictions, but regardful that the needs of the country demand that the deadlock which has for years tied up one of our most valuable resources should be broken.

RECIPROCAL RIGHTS OF STATES AND NATION.

Unquestionably, both the State and the Federal Governments have rights to be considered and protected in water-power legislation. This House surely has the probity and wisdom "to render to Cæsar the things that belong to Cæsar," to render to the State, to render to the National Government the things that belong to each, respectively. This, I believe, will be done when the many misconceptions which prevail concerning the reciprocal rights of the State and General Governments are cleared away.

In considering this legislation four principles should be kept clearly in mind:

First, the people of each separate State own in common the water resources therein, subject, however, to the right of the General Government to control navigation.

Second, the General Government, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, is supreme in its power to regulate and control interstate navigation.

Third, under the decision in the Utah Power Co. case, in Two hundred and forty-third United States, 389, the power of Congress is exclusive respecting the lands of the United States which may be needed for power sites or rights of way.

Fourth, that while the State has the supreme dominion over its streams it is subject to the control of navigation, and, further, "a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of its waters; so far, at least, as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property." (United States v. Rio Grande Co., 174 U. S., 690.)

In theory at least the bill before the House was drafted in fair recognition of the above correlative rights. It may be argued that the regulative and antimonopolistic provisions of the bill impinge upon State rights concerning such matters. Perhaps they do. If so, it may be said in justification that these regulatory provisions are such as are found in all wise State legislation where there has been an honest attempt to protect the rights of the public in any State.

While such matters may technically belong to the jurisdiction of a State, I feel warranted, in the interest of power development, in acquiescing in these provisions. They will at least permit the inauguration of great water-power development. If they are illegal excrescences the Supreme Court will soon cut them out and leave the State to its proper jurisdiction over any power plants that may be developed under this bill. This House has gone on record so often on these regulatory provisions that we know as a practical proposition that it is impossible to pass through the House any bill which does not embody these principles.

FEDERAL REVENUE NOT CONTEMPLATED.

I was glad to read in the testimony of Secretary Lane and the Chief Engineer of the Forest Service, voicing the views of the three Secretaries, that there is no intention to exact rentals any further than to meet the expenses of administration. This, to my mind, is the proper theory of this legislation, for subject to the rights of the General Government, which I have enumerated, the people of each State have a property right in the water-power resources situated in that State. It was vigorously argued in the committee that the water-power resources of the country should be made to render substantial returns to the Federal Treasury on the ground that these resources belong to the Federal Government. It was also suggested in debate that these water-power resources should be exploited for the benefit of the Federal Treasury. It has been suggested that a dollar a horsepower should be charged. To this I most strenuously object. Unless the water-power development has some legitimate relation to the improvement of navigation or to the use of the public lands, I am firmly convinced that the exaction of any substantial revenue would be an encroachment upon the property rights of the people of the State where such development is had. Any such revenue will only be shifted by the power companies to the consumer. If it is wise to make substantial rental charges these rentals should belong to the people of the States owning the water resources.

I think, from a legal standpoint, that section 10 of the bill should be amended so as to limit rental charges to meeting legitimate administrative expenses, except where the use of public lands is concerned or the development has some legitimate relation to the improvement of navigation; and, as a matter of policy, it is wise in most cases to so limit the rentals, otherwise they will only be shifted to the consumer. While it is the announced policy of the present administration, under the provisions of section 10, to charge rentals sufficient only to meet administrative expenses, yet there is no protection in the bill against the imposition of substantial charges should a change of policy or administration take place. The matter of these charges should not be left to the varying policies of changing administrations. The people of the several States have substantial property rights in their water-power resources that should be protected and not surrendered by their Representatives to the Federal Government. My convictions on this question are grounded on the genesis of our Government and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

THE PEOPLE OF EACH SEPARATE STATE HAVE A PROPERTY RIGHT IN THE WATER-POWER RESOURCES OF THEIR STATE.

The genesis of our Government shows that prior to the formation of our Federal Constitution the thirteen original States were sovereign independent States; that each sovereign independent State separately held in trust for its people the ownership, dominion, and control of its waters. All the advantage, usufruct, profit, and emolument that such waters held belonged to the people of each State where such waters were located, subject to the legislative control of the State, for the benefit of the people therein. The control of navigation, the right to the fish in the streams, and all other benefits, rights, and privileges in their waters, including the development of power, belonged to the citizens of these sovereign, independent, original thirteen States.

Our Government, according to the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court, is one of delegated and enumerated powers, and for this reason all powers not surrendered in the Constitution of the United States to the General Government were reserved to the original thirteen States. These older States now retain all rights and powers in and to their waters not surrendered to the General Government. Likewise, the people of the new States, having been admitted into the Union on a footing of equality with the thirteen original States, have the same rights in their waters as were possessed by the people of the thirteen original States on the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

These principles are frequently lost sight of by those who look upon the water-power resources of the country as resources belonging to the General Government. These principles are particularly ignored by those who advocate the imposition of substantial revenues to be paid into the Federal Treasury for permits to develop water power on our streams and rivers.

WATER RIGHTS RESERVED TO THE STATES.

What rights were surrendered to the Federal Government affecting the waters of the thirteen original States?

For the purposes of this bill we are concerned only with section 8, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, for in that section only are found whatever rights were surrendered to the General Government over our water powers that need concern us in the consideration of this bill.

In section 8, article 1, there was surrendered to the General Government the power—to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

Chief Justice John Marshall, in the famous case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1), decided that the word "commerce," in section 8 of the Constitution, included "navigation"; that, therefore, the power to regulate commerce included the power to regulate and control navigation. Accordingly, subject to the control of navigation by the General Government, all other rights, privileges, and advantages in the waters of the several separate States were reserved to the people therein as their common property, to be used for their exclusive benefit and advantage. For this reason I contend that if revenues are to be exacted for the development of water power, such revenues belong to the people owning the water powers developed, to be expended for the betterment of their schools, their highways, for irrigation, or such other internal improvement as the people or their legislatures deem most wise.

I believe that the people of my State are quite as competent as any Federal agency to expend therein any proceeds that may accrue at a dollar a horsepower, or any other sum, on the many millions of potential horsepower development located in the State of Oregon. I only wish my State had the same jurisdiction over the expenditure of the $12,000,000 of the reclamation fund derived from the sale of lands in the State of Oregon. And doubtless the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] wishes the same, as his State has been similarly treated.

If the General Government has a right to exploit the water-power resources of the several States as a money-making proposition, then the rights reserved and not surrendered in the Constitution were mere shadows and not the substance of substantial rights.

The General Government, as well as an individual, should be amenable to the legal maxim "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas"—so use your own right as not to injure the right of another.

Many decisions have been rendered by our Supreme Court showing that the rights reserved to the people of the several States in the Constitution of the United States were substantial property rights in their water resources, that these rights so reserved were not mere shadows, and when these decisions are read and understood they should appeal to the legislative probity and intellectual honesty of the House against the exploitation and confiscation of such rights for the benefit of the Treasury of the United States. For this reason I feel that the attention of the House should be directed to a few of the more important and controlling decisions where the line of demarcation between the rights of the General Government and the several States in their waters are clearly and forcibly stated.

These reserved rights can not be confiscated by tagging or labeling legislation "navigation." The Supreme Court will certainly, in view of its repeated holdings, ignore the sham and pretense of a legislative lie and protect these reserved rights where the legitimate objects of navigation are not concerned.

The first case to which I wish to call your attention is Martin v. Waddell (41 U. S., 410), wherein it is stated:

For, when the Revolution took place, the people of each State became themselves sovereign; and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters, and the soils under them, for their own common use, subject only to the rights since surrendered by the Constitution to the General Government.

The doctrine in this case has been restated in every decision of the Supreme Court where the subject matter has been considered.

Another leading case is Pollard v. Hagan (3 How., 229), showing the ownership in the navigable waters and soil by Alabama, and that such ownership was not granted to the United States, but was reserved to the States, subject to the control of navigation, and to that alone.

In the case of Pollard against Hagan, Third Howard, 229, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

Then to Alabama belong the navigable waters, and soils under them, in controversy in this case, subject to the rights surrendered by the Constitution to the United States, and no compact that might be made between her and the United States could diminish or enlarge these rights. * * * By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First, the shores of navigable waters, and the soils under them, were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively. Secondly, the new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States. Thirdly, the right of the United States to the public lands and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land in controversy in this case.

Hardin against Jordan holds, lands under water subject to State regulation and control, State may dispose of the usufruct, may lease oyster beds, grant fisheries, laws of each State govern use of waters and lands under them, tidewaters in this country synonymous with navigable rivers.

In Hardin against Jordan, One hundred and fortieth United States, 381, it is said:

Such title being in the State, the lands are subjected to State regulation and control, under the conditions, however, of not interfering with the regulation which may be made by Congress with regard to public navigation and commerce. The State may even dispose of the usufruct of such lands, as is frequently done by leasing oyster beds in them and granting fisheries in particular localities; also by the reclamation of submerged flats and the erection of wharves and piers and other adventitious aids of commerce. * * *

This right of the States to regulate and control the shores of the tidewaters and the land under them is the same as that which is exercised by the Crown of England. In this country the same rule has been extended to our great navigable lakes, which are treated as inland seas; and also, in some of the States, to navigable rivers, as the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, and in Pennsylvania, to all the permanent rivers of the State; but it depends on the law of each State to what waters and to what extent this prerogative of the State over the lands under water shall be exercised. In the case of Barney v. Keokuk (94 U. S., 324) we held that it is for the several States themselves to determine this question, and that if they choose to resign to the riparian proprietor rights which properly belong to them, in their sovereign capacity, it is not for others to raise objections.

Upon American Revolution title and dominion in tidewaters vested in several States. New States have same rights as original States, use of shores and uplands subject to sovereign control, of each State.

Grants by Congress of portions of the public lands within a territory to settlers thereon, though bordering on or bounded by navigable waters, convey, of their own force, no title or right below high-water mark, and do not impair the title and dominion of the future State when created; but leave the question of the use of the shores by the owners of uplands to the sovereign control of each State, subject only to the rights vested by the Constitution in the United States. (Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1.)

In this case the court further decides:

Upon the American Revolution the title and the dominion of the tidewaters and of the lands under them vested in the several States of the Union within their respective borders, subject to the rights surrendered by the Constitution to the United States. In the original States, by various laws and usages, owners of lands bordering on tidewaters were allowed greater rights and privileges in the shore below high-water mark than they had in England. The new States admitted into the Union since the adoption of the Constitution have the same rights as the original States in the tidewaters and in the lands under them within their respective jurisdictions. Upon the question how far the title extends of the owner of land bounding on a river actually navigable, but above the ebb and flow of the tide, there is a diversity in the laws of the different States; but the revealing doctrine now is that he does not, as in England, own to the thread of the stream. The title and rights of riparian or littoral proprietors in the soil below high-water mark are governed by the laws of the various States, subject to the rights granted to the United States by the Constitution.

Ownership and sovereignty over lands covered by tidewaters belong to the respective States; held by the people of the State in trust for the common use.

In the case of Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. People of Illinois (146 U. S., 387) it is said:

It is the settled law of this country that the ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters within the limits of the several States belong to the respective States within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the waters, and subject always to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the States. This doctrine has been often announced by this court and is not questioned by counsel of any of the parties.

* * * * * * *

The soil under navigable waters being held by the people of the State in trust for the common use and as a portion of their inherent sovereignty, any act of legislation concerning their use affects the public welfare. It is therefore appropriately within the exercise of the police power of the State.

State may change common-law rule of riparian rights and permit appropriations of flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise, subject to right of General Government, to secure navigability of navigable streams, and subject to Government's riparian right for beneficial uses of Government's property. State of New York may appropriate its waters and the United States may not question the appropriation, unless the navigability of the Hudson River is disturbed.

In the case of United States v. Rio Grande Dam & Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690, 702–706), the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Brewer, said:

The unquestioned rule of the common law was that every riparian owner was entitled to the continued natural flow of the stream. (Quoting 3 Kent Com. sec., 439.)

While this is undoubted, and the rule obtains in those States in the Union which have simply adopted the common law, it is also true that as to every stream within its dominion a State may change this common-law rule and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise. Whether this power to change the common-law rule and permit any specific and separate appropriation of the waters of a stream belongs also to the legislature of a Territory, we do not deem it necessary for the purpose of this case to inquire. We concede arguendo that it does.

Although this power of changing the common-law rules as to streams within its dominion belongs to each State, yet two limitations must be recognized:

First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of its waters, so far, at least, as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property. Second, that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States. In other words, the jurisdiction of the General Government over interstate commerce and its natural highways vests in that Government the right to take all needed measures to preserve the country even against any State action.

Notwithstanding the unquestioned rule of the common law in reference to the right of a lower riparian proprietor to insist upon the continuous flow of the stream as it was, and although there has been in all the Western States an adoption or recognition of the common law, it was early developed in their history that the mining industry in certain States, the reclamation of arid lands in others, compelled a departure from the common-law rule and justified an appropriation of flowing waters both for mining purposes and for the reclamation of arid lands, and there has come to be recognized in those States, by custom and by State legislation, a different rule—a rule which permits, under certain circumstances, the appropriation of the waters of a flowing stream for other than domestic purposes.

In the United States v. Rio Grande (174 U. S.) Mr. Justice Brewer further says:

The Hudson River runs within the limits of the State of New York. It is a navigable stream and a part of the navigable waters of the United States so far, at least, as from Albany southward. One of the streams which flow into it and contributes to the volume of its waters is the Croton River, a nonnavigable stream. Its waters are taken by the State of New York for domestic uses in the city of New York. Unquestionably the State of New York has a right to appropriate its waters, and the United States may not question such appropriation unless thereby the navigability of the Hudson be disturbed.

Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers with no inherent powers of sovereignty; its powers found in the Constitution and in that alone; all powers not granted reserved to the people; no power in the United States to control flow of stream, except to preserve or improve navigability.

In Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46) it was said:

The Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers; that it has no inherent powers of sovereignty; that the enumeration of the powers granted is to be found in the Constitution of the United States, and in that alone; that the manifest purpose of the tenth amendment to the Constitution is to put beyond dispute the proposition that all powers not granted are reserved to the people, and that if in the changes of the years further powers ought to be possessed by Congress they must be obtained by a new grant from the people. While Congress has general legislative jurisdiction over the Territories and may control the flow of waters in their streams, it has no power to control a like flow within the limits of a State, except to preserve or improve the navigability of the stream; that the full control over those waters is, subject to the exception named, vested in the State.

Lands underlying navigable waters belong to respective States; each new State admitted has same rights and powers regarding its waters as the older States.

In the case of Scott v. Lattig (227 U. S., 229, 242), Justice Van Devanter, in rendering the opinion of the court, said:

It was settled long ago by this court, upon a consideration of the relative rights and powers of the Federal and State Governments under the Constitution, that lands underlying navigable waters within the several States belong to the respective States in virtue of their sovereignty and may be used and disposed of as they may direct, subject always to the rights of the public in such waters and to the paramount power of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and that each new State, upon its admission to the Union, becomes endowed with the same rights and powers in this regard as the older ones. (County of St. Clair v. Lovingston, 23 Wall., 46, 68; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S., 324, 338; Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S., 387, 434–437; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 48, 50, 58; McGilvra v. Ross, 215 U. S., 70.)

States may establish rules of property for both navigable and nonnavigable streams, also ownership of land forming their beds and banks.

In United States v. Cress (243 U. S., 316), decided March 12, 1917, Mr. Justice Pitney said:

The States have authority to establish for themselves such rules of property as they may deem expedient with respect to the streams of water within their borders, both navigable and nonnavigable, and the ownership of the lands forming their beds and banks (Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S., 324, 338; Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S., 661, 671; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S., 371, 382; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 40, 58; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. Water Comrs., 168 U. S. 349, 358), subject, however, in the case of navigable streams, to the paramount authority of Congress to control the navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations. (Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 40; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S., 269, 272; Scott v. Lattig, 227 U. S., 229, 243.)

CASES INVOLVING FISHERIES ANALOGOUS TO PROPERTY RIGHTS OF STATES IN WATER POWERS.

Many cases have been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States holding that the separate States have an exclusive property right in the fish, oysters, and sponges in their navigable and nonnavigable waters, and that in the grant to Congress by virtue of the commerce clause of the Constitution, of the right to control navigation, there was no cession of the fisheries, the oysters, or sponge beds; that these remain the common property of the citizens of the State where such fisheries and beds were located.

It was further held that while these rights of fisheries were subject to the control of navigation by virtue of the commerce clause of the Constitution, yet even under that clause it was held that the United States had no right or authority to grant a license to anyone to take fish or oysters from the waters of a State. Defendants arrested under State laws frequently plead in justification a license from the United States, frequently plead the control of navigable waters by the United States under the commerce clause of the Constitution, but the Supreme Court of the United States invariably held the license of the General Government no justification for taking the property of a State, and invariably refused to hold that the fisheries were embraced within the commerce clause of the Constitution, saying that the States made no cession of their fisheries by virtue of the United States Constitution to the General Government. It has always seemed to me that there is a clear analogy between the rights of the States in and to their fisheries and their rights to their water-power resources; there is no distinction in principle between their rights to their fisheries and their rights to their water-power resources; and as the Supreme Court holds that there was no cession of the fisheries to the General Government, by parity of reasoning it may be said that there was no cession of the water powers to the General Government. Both the fisheries and the water powers are held subordinate to the right to control navigation, and to that alone, all other rights in these vast and valuable resources belong to the citizens of the several States in which they are situated. If these resources are to be made a source of revenue, that revenue belongs not to the General Government, but to the people of the separate States.

The first of these decisions, involving the property rights of the States in their fisheries, is the case of Corfield v. Coryell, volume 4, page 378, Washington's Circuit Court Report; the decision was rendered by Judge Bushrod Washington, a nephew of George Washington, and while the decision was rendered by Judge Washington, sitting as a judge in the circuit court for the third district, he was, when the decision was rendered, one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and was one of the justices who sat in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1), when Chief Justice John Marshall rendered the famous decision in the Gibbons v. Ogden case, holding that commerce included navigation, which decision laid the foundation for all such subsequent decisions giving Congress authority to control navigation. Judge Washington considered the case of Gibbons v. Ogden as full authority for the principal he states.

He held that in the grant to Congress to regulate commerce on the navigable waters of the several States there was no cession of territory or of public or private property; that the fisheries remained the common property of the citizens of the State to which they belonged, to be regulated by the laws of the State. That these fisheries did not become the common property of the citizens of all the other States; that the right to regulate the navigable waters granted to the General Government did not impair the right of the State government to legislate upon the subject of fisheries, provided they did not interfere with the regulations of Congress concerning navigation.

Judge Washington decided:

> Commerce with foreign nations and among the several States can mean nothing more than intercourse with those nations, and among those States for purposes of trade, be the object of that trade what it may, and this intercourse must include all the means by which it can be carried on, whether by the free navigation of the waters of the several States or by a passage over land through the States, where such passage becomes necessary to the commercial intercourse between the States.
> It is this intercourse which Congress is invested with the power of regulating, and with which no State has a right to interfere. But this power which comprehends the use of and passage over the navigable waters of the several States does by no means impair the right of the State governments to legislate upon all subjects of internal police within their territorial limits, which is not forbidden by the Constitution of the United States, even though such legislation may indirectly and remotely affect commerce, provided it does not interfere with the regulations of Congress upon the same subject.

Further, Judge Washington decided:

> The grant to Congress to regulate commerce on the navigable waters belonging to the several States, renders those waters the public property of the United States for all the purposes of navigation and commercial intercourse, subject only to congressional regulations. But this grant contains no cession, either express or implied, of territory or of public or private property. The jus privatum which a State has in the soil covered by its waters is totally distinct from the jus publicum, with which it is clothed. The former, such as fisheries of all descriptions, remains common to all the citizens of the State to which it belongs, to be used by them according to their necessities or according to the laws which regulate their use. * * * If then the fisheries and oyster beds within the territorial limits of a State are the common property of the citizens of that State, and were not ceded to the United States by the power granted to Congress to regulate commerce, it is difficult to perceive how a law of the State regulating the use of this common property, under such penalties and forfeitures as the State legislature may think proper to prescribe, can be said to interfere with the power so granted.

> That this exclusive right of taking oysters in the waters of New Jersey has never been ceded by that State, in express terms, to the United States is admitted by the counsel for the plaintiff; and having shown, as we think we have, that this right is a right of property, vested either in certain individuals, or in the State, for the use of the citizens thereof it would, in our opinion, be going quite too far to construe the grant of privileges and immunities of citizens as amounting to a grant of cotenancy in the common property of the State to the citizens of all the other States.

In McCready v. Virginia (94 U. S., 396) it was held that the States own the waters and the fish therein; that there was no cession or grant of power over the fisheries to the General Government; that the fish are the common property of the people of each State; that they have a property right in them; that the State could grant to its own citizens the exclusive right to take these fish; that "commerce has nothing to do with land while producing." This last sentence is significant, for what indeed has the commerce clause of the Constitution to do with land or water, while producing water power, other than protecting navigation?
